Veneration for an honorable ancestry is closely akin to religious feeling, and ought to give to life's ambitions the same character of aspirations, for the good, the true, the noble and the pure; for true manhood and true womanhood; for a truly worthy and honorable place in the world. The hope that this record may have something of such an influence upon those of our blood to whom it may come has been to me a strong incentive for its preparation and publication. I take the liberty of reminding those who feel no interest in their ancestry that they may reasonably expect the same indifference from their descendants, if they have any. Can they look upon that prospect without regret? Do they not lose a strong incentive to an honorable career when they fail to recognize their obligation, not only to their descendants, but also to their progenitors, to transmit without stain the name they have received in honor?

My original design was not to publish this book until entirely complete, but as the size of the manuscript increased the dread came that something might occur to damage or destroy it, and thus defeat the object for which so much time and labor had been spent. It was therefore decided to publish it now, and later, from time to time, as I can accumulate sufficient additional data, to publish a SUPPLEMENT which can be bound with this book.

It is regretted that efforts in obtaining particulars of the Sherborn Branch were not more successful. Comparatively few of that branch have shown much interest in the book. It is hoped they will furnish data to complete the work in the supplement, and all are requested to do so.

The illustrations (portraits) are from drawings made by the well known artist and expert in such pictures, Mr. Jacques Reich, No. 2 west Fourteenth street, New York City. I am very much indebted to him for his painstaking efforts to revive in his drawing the merits of old portraits and pictures, as well as to give correct portraits from recent photographs. Mr. Reich is not only a very superior artist, but a delightful person to transact business with.

Information of any errors that may be found in this work will be thankfully received. Corrections will be noted in the supplement. Though every possible pains has been taken to have this record correct, yet it is presumed there must be some errors, and information to correct them and fill up blanks of dates, etc., will be most acceptable. The information herewith has been collected from very many sources, and by many persons, and this of itself must necessitate some errors. The intention was and is to give the descendants of daughters in full as well as of sons, for among the descendants of our daughters are many most creditable to the family, but it has been much more difficult in many cases to obtain the particulars regarding them. This will explain the absence of much that is desired to complete the work. It is hoped in the supplement to add more particulars in this direction.

I desire to thank heartily those members of the family through whose pecuniary assistance it has been possible to embody so many illustrations, especially the first unsolicited contributor, Mrs. Rebecca R. (Breck) Rice. It is hoped the additional value these portraits give to the work will in some measure compensate them for the expense.

Any general remarks on the early history of our family, for which my study has furnished some materials, are deferred until the supplement, in which it is hoped to publish additional particulars of our ancestors in England. This latter information is necessary to a full understanding of the subject, as there are some questions regarding those who came from England upon which more light is desirable. I have given the record as it seemed to me established by the weight of evidence.

In the arrangement of the text the expense of printing was not entirely consulted, but rather, as far as practicable, the convenience of the reader, though it involved some repetitions.

From the nature of my profession my postoffice address is liable to frequent change, and those who may desire to communicate with me should direct to me care of the Adjutant General of the Army at Washington, D. C.

EXPLANATIONS.

Abbreviations, etc., used: b., born; d., died; m., married; bap., baptized; dau., daughter. The numerals, I., II., III., etc., denote the generations descending from Edward of Dorchester, as the first. The generations ascending from Edward's father as the first, are denoted by I.^a, II.^a, III.^a, etc. The figures at the left on each page are of running numbers for reference only; for convenience of reference, etc., each family of Brecks begins with a number ending with 0.; (decimals may be used in making additions to the text to avoid re-numbering; thus 250.10, 250.20, etc.; this brings the numbers for the children of the family with the next preceding whole number out of the proper sequence of numbers, but is convenient in making additions to the text.) Figures in brackets after a name, thus, John, [25] refer to numbers in the column of "running numbers for reference only." Children of the daughters of the maiden name of Breck (with an occasional exception) are given with the mother where her name occurs in her father's family; their descendants follow in the same place. "About" indicates that the date, etc., is probably correct; "probably about," that it is estimated or doubtful.

The following varieties of spelling for this name have been found in various old records: Breck (the usual way), Brick, Brecke, Breeck, Breecke, Breche, Bricke. Of these but two are in use at this date, viz.: Breck and Brick. The latter spelling is used by a few living descendants only.

THE BRECK FAMILY.

1. I.^a. — BRECK, father of the seven brothers who came to Massachusetts Bay during the 25 years following the landing of the Puritans at Dorchester in 1630, was probably born, married, lived and died in Lancaster County, England. The particulars of his marriage and his children, if any, who remained in England have thus far not been obtained by the writer. As his sons who came to Dorchester, especially Edward, seem to have had a good deal of property, he must have been a man of considerable wealth to give them a start in America. It is believed that he died probably about 1630. The following are his children who came to Massachusetts. They are given as the first generation (American) for this record:

I. CHILDREN.

2. 1. EDWARD, [10] b. probably in Lancaster County, England, about 1595; emigrated to Dorchester, Mass., 1635; d. 2d Nov., 1662, at Dorchester, Mass. He is the American progenitor of the "Dorchester Branch" of the Breck family.
3. 2. THOMAS, [3000] b. probably in Lancaster County, England, about 1600; m. in England; removed to Dorchester, Mass., probably about 1650, where he d. 3d Aug., 1657. He is the American progenitor of the "Sherborn Branch" of the Breck family.
4. 3. JOHN, b. probably in Lancaster County, England, about 1602; emigrated to Massachusetts probably about 1650; later resided at Medfield, Mass., where he d. 3d January, 1660. John Breck, of Medfield, Mass., who d. 20th Aug., 1690, probably his son. No other descendants from him found.

5. 4. HENRY, b. probably in Lancaster County, England, about 1605 emigrated to Dorchester, Mass., probably about 1640; where he joined the Church in 1641; no further particulars.
6. 5. ROBERT, b. in England, probably about 1607; came with his brother Edward to Dorchester, Mass., in 1635, but soon returned to England; nothing further known of him.
7. 6. SAMUEL, b. in England, probably about 1610; came to Dorchester, Mass., with his brother Edward in 1635, but soon returned to England; nothing further known of him.

Probably other children.

PART FIRST.

DORCHESTER BRANCH.

10. I. EDWARD BRECK, [2], yeoman and "man of distinction," was probably born in Lancaster County, England, within fifty miles of Liverpool, about 1595. He married in England probably about 1617, but neither the maiden nor the Christian name of his wife has been found. Being filled with a spirit of earnest piety and independence, he emigrated from Ashton, (now Ashton-under-Lyne,) with the Puritans to Massachusetts, bringing with him his wife, one daughter (name not found), and a son, Robert. They arrived, with Rev. Richard Mather, at Boston, probably in the ship "James," from Bristol, England, Captain Taylor, master, 7th August, 1635. He settled in Dorchester, Mass., with his family; joined the Church there in 1636. He seems, by the items of information gathered, to have prospered, building and owning one of the first grist mills, and owning more than one house, besides property in Lancaster. He lived on what is now known as Adams street, near where the Hon. John Howe since lived; was an officer of the town in 1642, 1645, and 1646.

About 1645 his wife died, and in 1647 he married Isabel Rigby, widow of John Rigby. She (maiden name not found) was born in England about 1610, where she married John Rigby, (in his signature spelled Rigbye). They came to Dorchester about 1637, and were early members of the Church there. Their son, Samuel Rigby, baptized in Dorchester 21st

The above fac-simile of the signature of "Edward Breck" was obtained from an instrument conveying to the town of Dorchester all rents and profits of Thompson's Island for the support of a free school; dated December, 1641.

March, 1641, (in his signature spelled Rigbee,) lived on what is now known as Adams street, being very near the spot where the Hon. John Howe has since lived. Of their daughters, the elder, Mehitable Rigby, baptized in Dorchester, 1643, married Nathaniel Turner, of Scituate, and the younger, Abigail Rigby, married 19th Dec., 1663, Thomas Holman, (born 6th Aug., 1641,) son of John Holman. The latter was a collector of furs, was ensign, and left a good estate. John Rigby died about 1645.

Mr. Breck died 2d Nov., 1662. A copy of his will and the inventory of his estate may be found in the Appendix.

On the 14th of November, 1663, Isabel married for her third husband Anthony Fisher, senior. There was no issue of this marriage.

Mr. Fisher died in Roxbury in 1671, in the 80th year of his age. Isabel died 21st of June, 1673. There are now no living descendants of the first wife of Edward Breck known to the writer, but all his living descendants heard from are also descendants of Isabel, his second wife. Copy of her will, she being at its date the widow of Anthony Fisher, with the inventory of her effects, may be found in the Appendix.

An account of the early settlement of Dorchester may also be found in the Appendix, together with other particulars of Edward Breck.

13. 3. ———, (daughter, name not found,) b. in England about 1622; came to Dorchester with her parents, where she m. — Blake, about 1640, and d. about 1645, leaving several children.
14. 4. ELINOR,* b. in Dorchester, Mass., probably about 1636; m. 12th Sept., 1656, Benjamin Crane, of Medfield, Mass. He removed to Weathersfield soon after his marriage.

* Savage says this daughter is mentioned in will of Edward. It must, however, have been some other paper, as her name is not mentioned in his will.

Styles, Sept., 1864, in St. Louis; she d. in Patterson, N. J., 27th July, 1877. The following extract from the preface to his life by his brother Rev. Dr. Charles Breck, briefly sets forth the life and work of this noble, devoted Christian.

REV. J. LLOYD BRECK, D.D.

"The Bishop of Pittsburgh, in his address to the Eleventh Annual Convention of his Diocese, in 1876, remarks as follows: 'There has been the death of a presbyter in a distant Diocese which touches our whole Church, for that presbyter was a leader such as God gives, only now and then, to any part of His Church. The Rev. Dr. J. Lloyd Breck, his prime of life not yet past, sank literally under his toils and cares for the Church and her missions, but a few weeks ago, in Northern California. He was my mate and friend in early school and college life, and the tie of affection was never severed. His bold, manly, aggressive missionary life for some thirty-six years, has been the example and glory of our American Church. It is hardly possible that any one of us, cleric or lay, need be told how the Nashotah School, our missions among the Indians, the Faribault School, and last the North California School, all sprang out of Dr. Breck's devoted zeal and sober enterprise. To many of us, who have watched his course all these years, it seemed as though this American Church of ours, without Lloyd Breck at work in it, was hard to think of. Plain in native endowment, but, from the first, indefatigable in acquirement, and always ennobled by God's grace, his good works have been the Church's treasure, and his example is one that young ministers ought to study well before they settle themselves down too easily and confidently to a ministry carefully made to cost as little as conscience will permit.'

"In Appendix VII. of the Journal of the General Convention for the year 1877, the Committee on Memorial of Deceased Members, in their report, made the following statement with regard to Dr. Breck: 'The Rev. James Lloyd Breck, D. D., a member elect of this house, died at Benicia, California, after a short illness, March 30th, 1876. He was born in Philadelphia, June 27th, 1818; graduated at the General Theological Seminary, May, 1841; was ordained in July, and immediately afterwards, in company with the Rev. William Adams and the Rev. J. H. Hobart, proceeded to Nashotah, in Wisconsin, where they began that associated work which inaugurated a new era in the Church. This being established, he moved farther west to Minnesota, where he founded at Crow Wing, and elsewhere, the mission work among the Indians, which has since assumed such importance in the Church. He also established at Faribault (since, the center of Church work in that diocese,) its schools for both sexes, and its Divinity School. This being accomplished, his earnest spirit moved him, in 1867, to go to the farthest limit of our country westward, and on the shores of California founded similar institutions. At the head of an Associate Mission he landed there in May, 1867, and locating at Benicia, founded St. Augustine's College and Grammar School, with a Divinity School attached; and this being established and given over to a board of trustees, he proceeded to found a school for young ladies, St. Mary's Hall. It was in the midst of this very successful work that he suddenly died, March 30th, 1876, leaving a vacancy in the Church which no one has yet been found to fill." See Appendix.

ADDITIONAL BIOGRAPHICAL AND HISTORICAL MATTER, OBITUARY NOTICES, LETTERS, ETC.

DORCHESTER, MASS.—The following extracts from Blake's "Annals of Dorchester," 1630 to 1753, will be of interest in showing the circumstances under which Edward Breck and his family lived in their new home, and the reasons for leaving England. The spelling of the original is not preserved in this extract :

ANNALS OF THE TOWN OF DORCHESTER.—When many most Godly and religious people that dissented from the way of worship then established by law in the realm of England, in the reign of King Charles the first, being denied the free exercise of religion after the manner they professed according to the light of God's Word and their own consciences, did under the encouragement of a charter granted by the said king, Charles, in the fourth year of his reign, A. D. 1628, remove themselves and their families into the colony of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, that they might worship God according to the light of their own consciences, without any burdensome impositions, which was the very motive and cause of their coming; then it was, that the first inhabitants of Dorchester came over, and were the first company or church society that arrived here, next to the town of Salem, who was one year before them.

In the year of our Lord 1629, divers Godly persons in Devonshire, Somersetshire, Dorsetshire, and other places, proposed a remove to New England, among whom were two famous ministers, viz. Mr. John Maverick (who I suppose was somewhat advanced in age) and Mr. John Warham (I suppose a younger man,) then a preacher in the city of Exon, or Exeter, in the county of Devon. These good people met together at Plymouth, a seaport town in the said County of Devon, in order to ship themselves and families for New England; and because they designed to live together after they should arrive there, they met together in the new hospital in Plymouth and associated into church fellowship, and chose the said Mr. Maverick and Mr. Warham to be their ministers and officers, keeping the day as a day of solemn fasting and prayer, and the said ministers accepted of the call and expressed the same; the Rev. Mr. John White, of Dorchester in Dorset, (who was an active instrument to promote the settlement of New England, and I think a means of procuring the charter) being present and preaching the fore part of the day, and in the latter part of the day they performed the work aforesaid.

This people being too many in number to come in one vessel, they hired one Capt. Squeb to bring them in a large ship of 400 tons; they set sail from Plymouth, the 20th of March, 1629-30, and arrived at Nantasket (now Hull) the 30th of May, 1630, having a comfortable though long passage, and having preaching or expounding of the Scripture every day of their passage, performed by their ministers. They had agreed with Capt. Squeb to bring them into Charles River, but he was false to his bargain, and would not come any further than Nantasket, where he turned them and their goods ashore on the point, leaving them in a forlorn wilderness destitute of any habitation and most other comforts of life. But it pleased God, they got a boat of some that had stayed in the country (I suppose for trade, for there was some at Noddles Island and at Charlestown that staid in the country for trade with the natives before these adventurers came over, as likewise Moreton of Merry-Mount at Brantrey) and put their goods in the boat, and instead of sailing up to Charles River in a ship, were forced (as I suppose) to row up in a boat, it being about three leagues to the mouth of the river. They went up the river until it grew narrow and shallow, and then put ashore and built a hut to shelter their goods, intending there to set down, it being about the place where Watertown now is. The Indians upon their arrival mustered thick, they thought about 300, but having with them an old planter, as they called him, one that had stayed in the country and could speak something of the Indian language, (I suppose they took him from Charlestown that now is, for they called there and saw several wigwams, and one Englishman in a house where they ate boiled bass, but had no bread to eat with it); they sent him to the Indians, who were persuaded to keep at a distance the first night, and the next morning when the Indians appeared, they offered no violence but sent some of their number holding out a bass; our people sent a man with a biscuit, and so they exchanged, not only then but often afterwards, a biscuit for a bass, and the Indians were very friendly to them, which our people ascribed to God's watchful Providence over them in their weak beginnings; for all the Company were not gone up the river, but about ten men to seek out the way for the rest. They were now landed upon the main continent in a wild and unknown wilderness, and they had brought cattle with them which if they put them ashore there would likely wander and be lost and themselves likewise in seeking them. They had not stayed here at Watertown but a few days but the rest of their company below had found out a neck of land joining to a place called by the Indians Mattapan, (now Dorchester) that was a fit place to turn their cattle upon to prevent their straying; so they sent to their friends to come away from Watertown, and they settled at Mattapan, and turned their cattle upon the said neck, then called Mattapannock, now called Dorchester-Neck. They began their settlement here at Mattapan the beginning of June as I suppose, or thereabout, A. D. 1630. and changed the name into Dorchester, calling it Dorchester Plantation. Why they called it Dorchester I never heard, but there was some of Dorsetshire, and some of the town of Dorchester that settled here; and it is very likely it might be in honor of the aforesaid Rev. Mr. White, of Dorchester. Our people were settled here a month or two before Governor Winthrop and the ships that came with him arrived at Charlestown, so that Dorchester Plantation was settled next to the town of Salem in the Massachusetts Colony, being before Charlestown or Boston; and the church of Dorchester the oldest church in the colony except Salem; and I suppose the only church that came over in church fellowship, the other churches being gathered here. The Indians here at Dorchester were also kind to our people.

The first inhabitants of Dorchester came chiefly from the said counties of Devon, Dorset and Somerset, and I think from some other places. They were a very Godly and religious people; and many of them persons of note and figure, being dignified with the title of Master, which but few in those days were. Their ministers or pastors were the said Rev. Mr. John Maverick and the Rev. Mr. John Warham; others of note were Mr. Rossiter, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Glover, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Terry, Mr. Smith, Mr. Gallope, Mr. Hull, Mr. Stoughton, Mr. Cogan, Mr. Hill, Capt. Southcott, Capt. Lovell, Mr. Duncan, Mr. Pinney, Mr. Richards, Mr. Way, Mr. Williams, Mr. Tilly and others. And among them came Capt. Roger Clap, a very worthy religious gentleman, who was then a young man, and to him we are beholden for the knowledge of many of the particulars before mentioned, he leaving them in writing among the instructions he left to his children. It seems many of these people were trading men, and at first designed Dorchester for a place of trade, and accordingly built a fort upon the hill called Rock Hill, wherein were several pieces of ordnance, near the Waterside; but the channel being poor and landing difficult, and Boston and Charlestown harbor being far more commodious, they desisted from that design, and many of them removed afterwards to Boston and other places, so that many families about in the country had their first rise from Dorchester, there not being here a large quantity of land to settle upon, that I suppose the inhabitants are but little if anything more numerous now than they were fifty or sixty years ago, young people, many of them, moving out as they grow up.

These first settlers of the town of Dorehester took up every one his spot to set down upon, pretty thick together at the northerly end of the town next to the aforesaid neck of land, and on the easterly side next to the sea, leaving many intervening spots of land between their settlements.

These years were spent in working themselves into settlements and incorporating into a body to carry on the public affairs of the plantation, in granting many parcels of land and meadow to I suppose every particular person; but for the house-lots where they first set down we have no records of them, they being taken up as aforesaid.

In these years great was the straits and difficulties these people met with for want of provisions for themselves and families, and as Capt. Clap expresses it, "Oh, the hunger that many suffered, and saw no hope in an eye of reason to be supplied, only by clams and muscles and fish, and bread was so very scarce that sometimes the very crusts of my father's table would have been very sweet unto me, and when I could have meal and water and salt boiled together, it was so good, who could wish better. And it was not accounted a strange thing in those days to drink water and to eat samp or hominy without butter or milk. Indeed it would have been a strange thing to see a piece of roast beef, mutton or veal, though it was not long before there was roast goat." And yet this people were very contented under their outward wants so long as they could enjoy the worship of God without any molestation; they did not meditate a return to England, but as the said Capt. Clap says, "I do not remember that ever I did wish in my heart that I had not come into this country, or wish myself back again to my father's house, yea, I was so far from that, that I wished and advised some of my brethren to come hither also, which accordingly one of my brothers and those two that married my two sisters, sold their means and came hither.

"The Lord Jesus Christ was so plainly held out in the preaching of the Gospel to poor lost sinners, and the absolute necessity of the new birth, and God's Spirit in those days was pleased to accompany the word with such efficacy upon the hearts of many, that our hearts were quite taken off from Old England and set upon Heaven. The discourse not only of the aged, but of the youth also, was not, How shall we go to England? (though some few did not only so discourse but also went back again) but How shall we go to Heaven? Have I true Grace wrought in my heart? Have I Christ or no? Oh, how did men and women, young and old, pray for Grace, beg for Christ in those days; and it was not in vain; many were converted, and others established in believing; many joined the several churches where they lived." I mention this to show what sort of people they were that came first into this country, what their spirit and design was, what a fervent love and zeal they had for God and His instituted worship, how contented under their straits and difficulties, while they enjoyed the Gospel and the free profession of their religion.

This year they had a meeting-house for the public worship of God, but we have no account when it was built. This year this plantation began the practice of choosing men, that we now call selectmen or townsmen. They chose twelve this year to order the affairs of the plantation, who were to have their monthly meetings, and their orders being confirmed by the plantation, were of full force, and binding to the inhabitants. There were many orders made this year concerning cattle and fences, etc., and penalties annexed, besides many grants of land. This year a fort was ordered to be built on the Rock upon Rock Hill, and the charge to be paid by a rate.

This year the plantation granted Mr. Israel Stoughton liberty to build a mill upon Neponsit River, which I suppose was the first mill built in this colony, and the said river has been famous for mills ever since.

This year they chose ten selectmen to order the affairs of the plantation, namely Mr. Newbury, Mr. Stoughton, Mr. Woolcott, Mr. Duncan, Goodman Phelps, Mr. Hathorne, Mr. Williams, Geo. Minot, Geo. Gibbes and Mr. Smith, and gave any seven of them power to make orders to bind the inhabitants until repealed by the inhabitants. This year they also appointed a bailiff, namely, Nicholas Upsall. There were also many grants of land this year.

This year were nine selectmen chosen, namely, William Phelps, Nathl. Duncan, Mr. George Hull, Mr. Dimocke, William Gaylard, Mr. Roger Williams, George Minot, John Philips and Mr. Newbery; and Walter Filer, bailiff. Before this year the orders of the plantation were signed John Maverick, John Warcham, William Rockwell and William Gaylord, or two of them; from this year forward that method ceased. There were many orders and grants of land this year.

This year, arrived here, on Aug. 16th, the Rev. Mr. Richard Mather, that was a long time after pastor of this church, and with him a great number of Godly people that settled here with him.* There came with him 100 passengers and 23 seamen, 23 cows and heifers, 3 sucking calves, and 8 mares, and none died by the way, though they met with as terrible a storm as was almost ever heard of.

This year were chosen twelve selectmen, namely, Mr. Stoughton, Mr. Glover, Henry Withington, Nathl. Duncan, Geo. Minot, Rich. Collicut, John Holman, Mr. Hill, Will. Gaylard, Christopher Gibson, John Pierce and Mr. Jones. And afterwards they ordered that ten men should be chosen, seven of whom should make orders and bind the inhabitants, being first published on a lecture day and not being then disallowed by the plantation. Joseph Flood, bailiff. There were many orders and grants of land this year. This year made great alteration in the Town of Dorchester, for Mr. Mather and the Godly people that came with him from Lancashire wanting a place to settle in, some of the people of Dorchester were willing to remove and make room for them, and so Mr. Wareham and about half the church removed to Winsor, in Connecticut Colony, and Mr. Mather and his people came and joined with Mr. Maverick and that half of the church that were left, and from these people so united are the greatest part of the present inhabitants descended. When these two companies of people were thus united they made one church, having the said Rev. Mr. John Maverick and the said Rev. Mr. Richard Mather for their pastors, and entered into the following covenant, viz.:

DORCHESTER CHURCH COVENANT MADE THE 23^D DAY OF JUNE, 1636.

We whose names are subscribed being called of God to join ourselves together in church communion, from our hearts acknowledging our own unworthiness of such a privilege, or of the least of God's mercies; and likewise acknowledging our disability to keep covenant with God, or to perform any spiritual duty which he calleth us unto, unless the Lord Jesus do enable us thereunto by His spirit dwelling in us, do in the name of Christ Jesus our Lord, and in trust and confidence of His free grace assisting us, freely covenant and bind ourselves, solemnly in the presence of God himself, His holy angels, and all His servants here present: That we will by His grace assisting, endeavor constantly to walk together as a right ordered congregation of Christ, according to all the holy rules of a church body rightly established, so far as we do already know it to be our duty, or shall further understand out of God's holy word; promising first and above all to cleave unto him as our chief and only God, and to our Lord Jesus Christ as our only spiritual husband and Lord, and our only high priest and prophet and king. And for the furthering of us to keep this blessed communion with God and His Son Jesus Christ, and to grow up more fully herein, we do likewise promise by His Grace assisting us, to endeavor the establishing amongst ourselves all His holy ordinances which he hath appointed for his church here on earth, and to observe all and every one of them in such sort as shall be most agreeable to His will. opposing to the utmost of our power whatsoever is contrary thereunto, and bewailing from our hearts our own neglect hereof in former times, and our polluting ourselves therein with any sinful invention of men.

And lastly, we do hereby covenant and promise to further to our utmost power, the best spiritual good of each other, and of all and every one that may become members of this congregation, by mutual instruction, reprehension, exhortation, consolation and spiritual watchfulness over one another for good. And to be subject in and for the Lord to all the administrations and censures of the congregation, so far as the same shall be guided according to the rules of God's most holy word. Of the integrity of our hearts herein, we call God, the searcher of all hearts, to witness; beseeching Him so to bless us in this and all our enterprises, as we shall sincerely endeavor by the assistance of His Grace to observe His holy covenant in all the branches of it inviolable forever; and where we shall fail, there to wait upon the Lord Jesus for pardon and acceptance and healing for His name's sake.

RICHARD MATHER,	NATHA'L DUNCAN,
GEORGE MINOT,	HENRY WITHINGTON,
THOMAS JONES,	JOHN POPE.
JOHN KINSLEY,

This year the General Court made a grant to Dorchester of the old part of the township, as far as the great Blewhill, and the town took a deed of Kitchamakin Sachem of the Massachusetts for the same.

1637.

The ten selectmen were Mr Glover, Nathl. Duncan, Mr. Jones, Mr. Bates, Rich. Collicut, Mr. Holman, Edwd. Clap, Roger Clap, Wm. Sumner.

This year the General Court made a second grant to the town home to Plymouth line, called the new grant.

In some part of this year the town chose twenty men to order the affairs of the plantation; and very many orders were made for the disposal of small pieces of land and marsh, etc., and a list of those that were to have land in the division of the Neck, and other lands, consisting of about 104 names.

This year Thomson's Island was appropriated for the benefit of a school, but afterward the town was sued out of the possession of said island, and the General Court granted 1,000 acres of wild land in lieu of it.

This year was an order for mounting the great guns at Mr. Hawkins' or Rockhill.

* * * * *

Selectmen—Mr. John Glover, Bro. [Edward] Breck, Ens. Holman, Bro. Bates, Bro. Gibson, Bro. Upshall, Thos. Clark. Bailiff, Geo. Proctor.

This year it was ordered that every person that had any matter to offer to the town must first acquaint the selectmen with it, or else it was not to be debated on under a penalty; agreeable to the present law requiring all the matter of the meeting to be expressed in the warrant.

* * * * *

This year there were wardens appointed to take care of and manage the affairs of the school; they were to see that both the master and scholar performed their duty, and to judge of and end any difference that might arise between master and scholar, or their parents, according to sundry rules and directions there set down. The first wardens were Mr. Howard, Dea. Wiswell and Mr. Atherton.

This year they agreed upon the building of a new meeting-house, and granted a rate of £250; the committee, Mr. Glover, Nathl. Duncan, Mr. Atherton, Mr. Jones, Dea. Wiswell, Dea. Clap and Mr. Howard; Raters, Ewd. Breck, Wm. Sumner, Thos. Wiswell, William Blake and Roger Clap.

Selectmen for this year were Humphrey Atherton, Roger Clap, John Wiswell, Thos. Jones, Hopstill Foster, Geo. Weeks and Wm. Blake. Baliff, Sergeant Sumner.

This year was composed and recorded an instrument called the Directory, wherein were many good orders and rules which the inhabitants bound themselves to observe, in their orderly managing their town meetings, some of which were, that all things should be aforehand prepared by the selectmen, that all votes of importance should be first drawn in writing and have two or three distinct readings, before the vote was called for. That every man should have liberty to speak his mind meekly and without noise; that no man should speak when another was speaking; that all men would countenance and encourage all the town officers in the due execution of their offices, and not fault or revile them for doing their duty, etc. This Directory used to be read at the opening of the town meetings afterwards, as the laws of reformation are ordered to be read now. This year was also an order made, that at all town meetings the selectmen were to appoint one of themselves to be moderator, near conformable to the present law of the province. There were also this year, and before and after, divers orders about fences, cattle, swine, marking of cattle, etc., much like what the province law now requireth, as also for managing of common fields, etc., which orders had penalties annexed, and men appointed to see them executed, and the fine destreined by the bailiff.

Selectmen, Mr. Glover, Mr. Jones, Ewd. Breck, John Wiswell, John Holland, Edward Clap and Wm. Clark.

1656.

Selectmen, Mr. Patten, Ewd. Breck, Ens. Foster, Mr. Jones and Nathl. Glover. Raters, Sergt. Capen, Wm. Clark and Robt. Badeock. Baliff, Thos. Lake. This year Wm. Blake, Sr., was chosen recorder for the town, and clerk of the writs for the county of Suffolk; he was to have 20s. per year, and be rate-free.

1657.

Selectmen, Lt. Clap, Ens. Foster, Mr. Jones, Mr. Patten and Ewd. Clap, Raters, Joseph Farnworth, William Clark and Rich. Withington. Baliff, Lawrence Smith. This year there were also two constables chosen, viz.: John Capen and Wm. Trescott.

This year the town at the request of the Rev. Mr. John Eliot, granted Punkapuog Plantation for the Indians, and appointed men to lay it out, not exceeding 6,000 acres, and at the same time 500 acres to Lt. Roger Clap, and 1000 acres to be laid out for the school of Dorchester.

The records of births and deaths that was before this year is said to be accidentally burnt in Thomas Millet's house, and so are all lost, except a few families that kept the account of their childrens' births, entered them in the next book of the records of births.

This year there is recorded nineteen births and seventeen deaths.

LANCASTER, MASS.—The following from the history of this town, by Marvin, contains some particulars of interest, and shows the enterprise and standing of Edward of Dorchester :

In 1643 Thomas King with others bought of Sholan (the Indian chief) eighty square miles of land on the Nashua River, about thirty miles from Boston. It was at first called Nashua Settlement, and included a part of the present town of Sterling. In 1653 there were nine families in the place, and they petitioned the general court for incorporation under the name of Lancaster, Edward Breck of Dorchester being one of the petitioners. The General Court granted them the liberty of a township, and ordered that it be called Lancaster, and that Edward Breck, Nathaniel Hadlock, Wm. Kerly, Thomas Saxyer, John Prescott and Ralph Houghton, be for the present Prudential Managers of the town, until the place shall be so far settled with able men as the court shall judge meet to grant them full liberty of a township, according to law. In 1654, the number of families being about twenty, they again petitioned the general court for full liberty of a township. Edward Breck's name at the head of nine others was sent to the court requesting that seven out of the ten be appointed Prudential Managers of the town the ensuing year, after which they were to select their own officers. The court granted their petition.

Edward Breck stayed but a short time, returning to Dorchester. His property in Lancaster is mentioned in his will and the inventory of his estate.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—The following, by Rev. Solomon Clark, from the Hampshire Centennial Gazette of 1886, is of interest, this town having been in early days the home of many Brecks and the center from which a goodly number took their departure. The time referred to as "one hundred years ago" is 1786. Some of the old New England customs are also described :

LARGE FAMILIES IN 1786.—One hundred years ago, Northampton families were often large, many contained ten, eleven, twelve children ; sometimes thirteen, fourteen, seventeen and eighteen children. Seven and eight children were considered families of medium size. Single names then were the invariable rule. For the first 150 years an instance of a double name is not remembered. During that long period, in selecting a name for a child, whether son or daughter, in eight instances out of ten, parents took it from the Bible.

MODES OF TRAVEL, ROADS, VEHICLES, ETC.—One hundred years ago, the common mode of riding was on horseback; sometimes two, father, mother, and often little children, mounted on the same horse. The principal streets, King, Pleasant, Market, Hawley, Bridge, South, Elm, Prospect, West, existed then, but the roads or highways were very unlike what they now are. Wagon tracks were slowly taking the place of horse and foot paths, which led from house to house. Comfortable vehicles, if owned, could be used only to a limited extent. Even the mail that came at first to town once a week in 1792, from Hartford to Brattleboro, was brought on horseback. The roads did not admit of a better mode of conveyance. People attending church from the out-districts came on horseback, the young folks walked. One-horse wagons were not in use until the beginning of this century, and then sparingly.

WOODPILES AND FIREPLACES.—In 1786, enormous woodpiles, late in the winter, graced every dooryard. Wood was abundant and cheap, cut and drawn sled length, or eight feet, from the woods. The winters were cold, extending into the spring. Stoves were a luxury unknown in those times. Large fireplaces, a rousing fire, a settle, having a long bench and a high back, characterized every dwelling.

FOOD.—One hundred years ago, in respect to the articles of food, it might be said, game of all kinds abounded. The rivers contained choice varieties of fish. Deer on the hills, within a few miles, were numerous. No unusual thing for venison to adorn their tables. Prices ruled low. Mutton plenty at two cents per pound. Beef two cents and two-thirds of a cent. Butter six cents. Fishermen did not care for shad, now considered a delicacy. They fished for salmon. In drawing in their nets they retained salmon only, returning the shad to their native element. One of the requisites for dinner all the year round, in nearly every household, was a boiled Indian pudding. Hasty pudding Saturday night was the almost universal rule. As to tea, coffee, chocolate, all were kept by traders, and in common use, especially tea and coffee.

CLOTHING.—One hundred years ago, traders and shopkeepers, as merchants were then styled, dealt scarcely at all in dress goods. No cloth factories then. Wearing apparel for men and women was of home manufacture. With the exception of shoes, boots, hats, felt hats, the raw material went through the various processes at home, and when occasion required, as the following will show, the process, from beginning to end, was rapid: "In 1779, one morning in May, I came down stairs and found mother in tears. What was the trouble? Brother John was to march next day after to-morrow at sunrise. He would suffer for winter apparel. What garment was especially needed? Pantaloon. If that is all, I said, we will spin and weave him a pair before he goes. But, said mother, the wool is on the sheep's back, and the sheep are in the pasture. To shorten the story. I went to the yard, my brother seized a white sheep. I sheared sufficient for half the warp, and sent the wool in to be carded. Calvin ran for a black sheep, and held her. I cut off wool for my filling and half the warp. It was spun, washed, sized and dried in that day. The next day it was put into a loom and finished. Then washed, dried, the garment cut and completed three hours before sunrise the next morning. All this was done without any modern improvements." Such were our grandmothers a century ago, equal to any emergency.

COLLEGE GRADUATES 1685-1786.—About seventy. Number who had entered the ministry, 1685-1786, twenty-six. Number who became lawyers during that time, seventeen; number of physicians, eleven. Number of Northampton ladies who married ministers, 1673-1786, twenty-six.

THE NEW ENGLAND PRIMER.—One hundred years ago the young people were taught the New England Primer, a school and household book, taught in the family Sabbath afternoon before sunset. Taught at a particular season of the year in most of the meeting-houses, a time-honored New England peculiarity of a century ago, handed down to their descendants by the early settlers. Schools usually recited it once a week, either in the forenoon or afternoon of Saturday. As books were scarce, every one, old and young, knew the primer, or what is the same, the catechism.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH.—Another New England peculiarity one century ago, viz.; the observance of Saturday evening as a part of the Sabbath. Introduced by the first generation, so it continued for over 150 years. Farmers returned home from daily toil in the meadows and elsewhere earlier Saturdays than on the other days of the week. The primitive rule was to have the secular labor completed by the going down of the sun on Saturday. So they understood that passage, "From even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath."

A SINGULAR CUSTOM.—One hundred years ago and since, persons detained by sickness from public worship, on regaining health and coming to the sanctuary usually expressed thanks in a note read by the minister. As many as four or five of these were often read on the same Sabbath. Within the present century, moreover, those contemplating a journey, whether to Boston or New York, usually made a written announcement of it in church, requesting public prayer for a safe and prosperous return.

SEATING THE MEETING HOUSE.—One hundred years ago, a committee of influential men was appointed to assign married people and unmarried of adult years to a particular seat in the meeting-house. As public sentiment then went strong in favor of church attendance, so it required that every foot and inch of space inside the sanctuary should be used in the most economical manner, so as to accommodate every person in the community with a seat. The young people occupied the galleries, young men and boys on one side, young ladies and girls on the other; young lads moreover sat on the pulpit stairs facing the assembly. The result was that in 1786, the third meeting house, 40 by 70, capable of seating 800, was thronged from Sabbath to Sabbath. So many young people crowded the galleries, the town voted in 1791, as a means of preserving order, that tything men should sit in conspicuous places in that part of house. Henceforth for many years these, with a long rod, the symbol of authority, constituted important officials.

* * * * *

Another extract from the same paper, showing progress in Northampton :

1739. Men and women not allowed to sit together in the meeting-house.

1785. Town "voted not to be at any expense for schooling girls." No public school for girls until the town was indicted.

1786. Young men and young women seated separately in the meeting-house under the care of tything men.

1790. Criminals convicted of theft were publicly whipped.

1791. Transient persons were warned out of town.

1792. Girls first admitted to the public schools.

1800. No men except Federalists stood well in good society.

1812. Separate pews were made near the doors in the gallery of the "old church" for colored persons, one for men labeled "B. M.," and one for women labeled "B. W."

1829. Up to this time, no meeting-house had been raised, or ministers ordained, without a liberal supply of intoxicating drinks for the workmen and the ministers.

1836. First high school for girls established.

1863. The town erected a new high school building for the equal education of boys and girls, at a cost of $36,000.

1871. The town voted $25,000 to Smith College, for the higher education of women.

1886. Over 400 young ladies attending college and collegiate schools, in town.

10. I. EDWARD BRECK.—The following items in his history are collected chiefly from the "History of the Town of Dorchester":

1638, he bought a division of lands beyond the "Blue Hills" from Thomas Treadwell who removed to Ipswich.

1641, 7th Dec., was one of the present inhabitants of the town of Dorchester who signed a conveyance of land to the town for the special establishment and support of a "free school" in Dorchester for the "instructinge and Teachinge of children and youth in good literature and Learninge." A fac-simile of the signatures of all the signers of this document is published in "Blake's Annals of Dorchester, 1630 to 1755"; Boston, 1846.

1642 and 1645, was a selectman of the town.

1645, 15th Dec., "There was given to Edward Breck by the hands of most of the inhabitants of the town, Smelt Brook Creek, on condition that he doth set a mill there." He did set a mill there; the street on which it stood was later called Mill street; the mill was known as the "Tide Mill" and subsequently as the "Tileston Mill," from a later owner, Timothy Tileston, in whose family it has since been.

1646, was selectman of the town.

In 1654, sold a house and garden in Boston to his son Robert. This house had formerly belonged to Henry Mosely.

1655 and 1656, was a selectman of the town.

1655, 8th Feb., signed on behalf of the selectmen of the town a contract with Ichabod Wiswall for the latter's services as teacher for the "free School in Dorchester"; payment to be made two-thirds in "wheate, pease or barley," "and one-third in Indian" [corn]. In this year he petitioned the General Court to have his fine of £4 remitted for not serving as constable; but the court "saw no cause to grant his request," 1657, paid the school teacher peas in part payment of salary.

The following letter from the Rev. James Wood, of Ashton, England, was discovered and copied by the Hon. Joseph Breck, [1290], of Boston. The original was in the possession of Thos. L. Howe, of Dorchester. It was much discolored by age, dampness and ink stains, and required no small labor to decipher. There was no year in the date of the original. In the copy furnished the writer by the Rev. Dr. Charles Breck, [1540], found in a letter of his uncle, Samuel Breck, [940], the date was given as 1634; but this is evidently erroneous, as Edward did not reach Dorchester until 1635. The letter was written after the death of Edward's first wife and his daughter (Mrs. Blake) both placed in 1645. The date of this letter therefore was probably 1646. The copy is given as written:

ASHTON,* 12th, 2d Month.

TO HIS DEARE AND LOUEING FFREND, EDWARD BRECKE AT DORCHESTER, IN NEWE ENGLAND THESE,

Ould and loucing ffrend, though I have written twise & receiued no returne, yet I cannot let slipp such as optunitie, but write again at least wth importunitie, to force my old frend to his penn againe: But me thinkes my thoughts return this apollogie for my old frend, he is in sorrowe for his dear wife, for his sweet daughter, both which I hear god hath of late taken unto himselfe. So hopefull a sonne here, so gracions & sweet a wife & daughter there, cannot but lye close to a tender father and loueing husband's hart. But I question not but god hath fitted you for these sadd and heaue tryalls before he brought them vpon you. He hath stored you wth grace to manage all states & conditions, & wisdom to deny all affections & vnseemly passions. Now you see the lords will is done. I know you cannot but willingly submit. You have lost wife & children, louing and louely, but they are not lost, who are singing their halleluiahs in heauen, & inioy for an earthly husband, parent eternall & havenly. But O they were louely & pleasent in their liues, and content & comfort was lapped upp in their inioyment. I know it was not so, you were of too high communion with god to satisfie yourself wth creature comforts. But, I loued them dearly, your loue may now the more freely & intirely be carried on to god that gave them; O let all your sorrow be godly sorrow, & all your ioy, ioy of the holy, holy ghost, wch no man cann take from you; make god your all in all, let him be your treasure, so you cannot then be made poore by any losse, or miserable by any distresse; yea, so your duties will be sweet, crosses more tolerable, sin intolerable; your hart more enlarged, mind more spitualized, your life more gracious, death more comfortable; goeing not only to your wife and children, but to your treasure & your all; we blesse god for your peace, vnion, & harmonic in your churches; care to redresse errors and opinions which wth us abound.

These sad afflictions forcing me to write something, have extorted ffrom mee these few advertisements, which I begine to checke my selfe, knowing I write to an old disciple and one in Christ long before my selfe and liue amongst such water springs as need none of poor sauorles droppings; but I haue done. Your old friend thinkes much. Hee hath not hard from you theise 2 yeares last past; it may be you writt & the letters miscarried. I pray you commend me dearly to your sonn Robert, & to your man John Birchall, that went over with you fro our Towne, I hear he is well & liueing in your Town again. So in hast I rest. Yor dear ffrend,

JAMES WOOD.

* Now Ashton-under-Lyne.

The extract of title page and letter following were kindly furnished the writer in 1886 by Mr. Edward Breck [1833], son of Lieutenant Commander Joseph B. Breck, U. S. Navy, then at the University of Leipsic in Germany, the letter, etc., having been copied by him from a pamphlet discovered in the Library of the British Museum in London, England:

*Answer to a * * * Paper, * * * against 'those people whom he (and the World) calls Quakers. Dated from Dorchester in New England, Aug. 17, 1655, subscribed, Edward Breck, which was directed to a people at Rainforth in Lancashire which he calls, A Church of Christ. * * * London, printed for Giles Calvert, at the Black Spread-Eagle neer the West End of Pauls, 1656.*

The pamphlet begins as follows:

EDWARD BRECK TO THE CHURCH OF CHRIST AT RAINFORTH.*

Deerly beloved in the Lord Jesus Christ, I have sundry times had a mind to salute you in the Lord, but partly my own rudeness, and partly other obstacles in the way, I have not yet communicated anything to you, as to the church of Christ since my departing; but because God hath removed me so far distant by reason whereof I am never like to see your faces, and age and weekness coming upon me, putting me in mind of my end; that I might do something at last whereby to testify my love & dear respects to you, and that in all this length of time of absence, you might perceive that I have not wholly forgotten you, but with many secret desires breathed after you eternal welfares; I have therefore for your sakes, pressed myself to break through many difficulties, presuming upon your kind acceptance, notwithstanding you finde in me much weakness of expression matter, argument, &c. But not to trouble you with a long preface, where my work is small, little I have to say, and slenderly I shall deliver it, unless God make known his power through weekness; that which I have to say is a friendly exhortation to continue in the grace and faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and not be carried away with every winde of Doctrine, whereby you should be spoiled of your faith and hope which you have in the Lord Jesus Christ: O Beloved! Remember the days of old! and the yeers of ancient times, when after the Marian-times that Religion began to spring, God honored Rainforth with many godly pillars, men famous in their days, for faith and holiness, and the profession of true Religion, when the Country was overwhelmed, or greatly clouded with Religion, or superstition, yet these men (whose names are not yet worn out of memory) cleave fast to the truth; the face of opposing, jeering, scorning and reproaching enemies, their reproaches did not dant the spirits of these men, but they patiently bore it with joy, and prest on forward in the waies of Truth of the Gospel, for the price and high calling of God in Jesus Christ:

The next Generation I was a little better acquainted with, whose names are fresher in your memories, divers godly people God raised up to do him some service, and to profess and defend his truth, & maintain his Ministry, which was a great thing they labored after; these men gave not their minds with Balaam, to look out for visions, to curse Gods people, nor to rail on Magistracy, nor Ministry, but humbly and in the fear of the Lord submitted themselves to Jesus Christ in the use of his own institutions, so farre as he gave them liberty and ability thereunto.

And now, what the present Generation is since I left the Country, I do not so well know, many of the old stock being dead and removed; yet (I hope) there are some breathings of Spiritual life amongst you, and men holding forth the faith and true Religion in sincerity, notwithstanding what may be otherwise found among you. My Exhortation therefore is, To hold forth this Faith, and continue faithfull therein untill Death, never leave it, forsake it not lest God forsake you, and cast you off forever; but Truth is Beloved, and that which is my Griefe that I [have] been informed, and dare not but believe it, that there are men among you who are departed from the faith and purity of the Gospel to depend upon Jesuiticall and Satanical delusions, I mean such as go under the name of Quakers, who depend not upon the Scriptures for Light, but on what they receive from a spirit which casteth them into a trance, what these Trances are let men of understanding, for I am weak, onely tell what I think, they are either from the good spirit of God, as hee spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets in visions, &c., or from the Devill: if they be from that good spirit of God, then they like to that spirit which spake by the Prophets, they accord with all the writings of the Prophets, and most of all with all the doctrines and sayings of Jesus Christ, his Ordinances and Institutions. Secondly. etc., etc.

He then proceeds to condemn the Quakers and their doctrines in a most unequivocal way, and closes his letter by exhorting his friends to bury distinctions of creed, as Presbyterians or Independents "as many use terms which are better forborn," and concludes as follows:

But I shall say no more, but commend you to GOD and to the WORD of his GRACE, which is able to build you up further, and to give you an inheritance among them that are sanctified.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, and alway: AMEN.

DORCHESTER, IN NEW ENGLAND,
Aug. 17
1655.

Your Friend, and
Brother in the Lord Jesus,

EDWARD BRECK.

The remainder of the pamphlet is not copied.

The following wills and inventories are of interest, giving much insight into the principles, way of living, household conveniences, etc., etc., of Edward Breck and his wife Isabel. The spelling, etc., in these copies is corrected from the originals (now safely preserved among the probate records in Boston) from which they were carefully taken direct. The original documents not being in the handwriting of Edward or his wife, the clerical errors are not preserved.

I, Edward Breck, of Dorchester, in the County of Suffolk, in New England, yeoman, being very sick of body, but of fit memory, blessed be God, do here make my last will and testament this thirtieth day of October, in the year one thousand, six hundred sixty and two.

Imp. I do here commit my soul into the hands of the Lord and my body to decent burial in the earth.

And for this world's goods, which God has graciously given me, my will is that, first, that all debts due from me to any man shall be justly paid and my funeral discharged.

Secondly, my will is that all my daughter Blakes children shall have each of them 49 shillings paid unto them out of my estate in one year after my decease.

Thirdly, my will is that my son Robert, although he has had his full portion already, yet my will is that he shall have twenty shillings paid to him also, as a token of my love and fatherly affection towards him.

Fourthly, my will is that Isabel, my dear and loving wife, shall have one-third part of all my movable estate to her own personal use and behoof, accounting the former legacies as part of the estate out of which she shall have her third. Also, I give unto my wife one-third part of my housing and lands during her natural life, she keeping and leaving it in good repair.

Fifthly, my will is that the other two-thirds part of my estate both of land and goods shall be equally divided unto my four children, viz., John, Mary, Elizabeth and Susana, provided that my son John shall have liberty to reserve the land to himself and pay his sisters the valuation thereof upon a just appraisement. Also my will is that my son John shall have after my wife's death that third part of house and land which she in her lifetime is to enjoy, and this to be an addition to his portion, and to him only, provided, that if it shall please God to take away any one or more of my children by death before they come to enjoy their portions, then the portion of such a one shall be equally divided unto those that do survive of those of my children last named. Furthermore my will is that whereas I have some estate at Lancaster remaining in land, I do leave it in the liberty of my wife and other friends who may be advised with them for to sell it, or not sell it, as shall be thought best.

Lastly, my will is that Isabel my wife shall be executrix of this my will and testament with the help and advise of Edward Clapp and John Capen, deacons of the church at Dorchester, with whom she shall advise, and not to act without their consent. Witness my hand and seal this thirtieth day of the eighth month, 1662, as above said.

RALPH HOUGHTON.

This last will and testament of me, Isabel Fisher, widow, of Dorehester, in the county of Suffolk in New England, made this twentieth day of September, in the year of our Lord, one thousand six hundred, seventy and one; who being very weak of body yet of perfect memory (blessed be God) do hereby make a disposal of my outward estate as followeth:

First, I do resign my soul to God that gave it, and my body to a decent burial in the dust; and for my worldly goods which God has graciously given me, my will is all my debts be truly paid and my funeral discharged.

Secondly, my will is that my land in the Captain's Neck, which I bought of Samuel Proctor, containing two acres, more less, I give it unto Abigail, the daughter of my daughter Turner. And for my part of meadow, which I bought of Samuel Proctor, I do hereby bequeath my right and title therein to my son-in-law, Samuel Paul, he paying the purchase as myself should have done.

Also I do give and bequeath unto every one of my grand-children a sheep.

Also my will is that my son John Breck shall have my great brass pan upon condition that he accept of the lumber about the house in part of his portion appointed him by his father Breck, upon an appraisement.

Also I give unto my son Samuel Rigby, and my son John Breck, to each of them five shillings as a token of my love unto them, to be paid out of my estate.

And for all the rest of my estate I give it equally unto my five daughters, excepting three pounds in money which is due to me from my son-in-law, Thomas Holman, the which three pounds I give it unto my daughter Susana towards her wedding apparel if God will her thereunto, or for any other use that she shall make of it.

And I do hereby will and appoint that my son-in-law Thomas Holman, and my son-in-law Samuel Paul, be executors of this my will and whole estate, and that this my will be performed according to the true intent and meaning hereof. I do desire and appoint my loving friends and brethren, Lieutenant John Capen and Ensign Richard Hale, to be overseers of my will, to see the estate be duly prized and equally divided as in bond expressed, and if any of my children shall contend and quarrel, my will is that they shall have nothing. In witness hereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal the day and year above said.

50. II. JOHN BRECK, CAPTAIN.—The following items of his history have been gathered from the "History of Dorchester":

"Capt. Breck's Cyder Mills" stood on the land previously owned by Henry Way, who came over with Roger Williams in 1631.

1680. "John Breck desired [of the town of Dorchester] liberty to get a suit of masts and yards for a vessel which he had undertaken to build in this town."

At the request of Lieut. Capen and William Sumner, the town "dismissed" them from the office of feoffees for the school land, and made choice of Timothy Tileston and John Breck in their stead.

8th March, it was voted that the school house be repaired "where it now stands." John Breck and Timothy Tileston to attend to the work.

1681. In March the question being, to make choice of some person to be on trial for the "work of the Ministry," at an adjourned meeting held on the Sabbath (the 27th), "votes were called for again, for one of the two which had most votes the last Sabbath." Rev. John Danforth, of Roxbury had received the most votes at the previous meeting: "there were 37 votes for Mr. Danforth and 22 for Mr. Capen; at the same time Mr. John Breck, who was not in full communion, intruded himself in, and put in a vote, which was very offensive to the Church; but this vote was taken out, and he commanded by Mr. Stoughton to go out of the meeting-house, when the Church had been tried by a vote to know whether they did approve of his acting; which being declared in the negative, then the contrary vote was called for, but none held up their hands but only Henry Leadbetter, who thought that such as had submitted to the government of the Church should have liberty to vote in such a case; but it was declared to the contrary." "Mr. Breck repented of voting as he did on the occasion mentioned, and gave satisfaction therefor."

1682. This year the selectmen approbated Widow Elizabeth George to keep an Ordinary again, provided that John Breck should see that it was kept according to law. Mrs. George's husband had previously kept one, and at his death she continued the business. At this date she was 81 years of age.

1683. In December the town chose "the worshipful Mr. Stoughton, Enoch Wiswell and John Breck" to see to the laying out of the 1,000 acres of land granted by the General Court for School land, in 1659, in lieu of Thompson's Island.

1686. Captain John Breck one of the selectmen.

1687. Timothy Tileston, John Breck and John Withington were chosen a committee to set the bounds of the 300 acres of land which formerly was pitched upon for the use of the school, and to make their return to the selectmen.

1688. Captain John Breck one of the selectmen.

1690. March 11th, the town chose Elder James Blake, John Breck and Samuel Clap to seat the people in the meeting-house.

The following will and inventory of effects present many items of interest, especially the provision in regard to the education of his children.

Dorchester, Feb. 4, Anno Domini [sixteen] ninety-one. In the name of God, Amen. Whereas, I, John Breck, of Dorchester, aforesaid, in the County of Suffolk, in the Colony of Massachusetts, in the Territory of New England, being weak of body, but of perfect understanding and memory, make this my last will and testament as followeth: First and principally, I recommend my spirit into the hands of the Father of my Redeemer, who I trust hath washed my soul with His own most precious blood. My body I commit by a decent funeral to the earth whence it was taken, in hopes of a glorious resurrection. And for the outward estate which God hath given me, I dispose thereof manner as followeth:

First, my will is that all my due debts be fully paid and discharged.

Item. I will that my dear wife have the one-third part of all my estate, lands and moveables during her widowhood, and if she see come to marry, I will to her absolutely and freely one hundred pounds of said thirds, to be paid her in movables by my executor hereinafter mentioned. The remainder of said thirds I leave to be disposed of according to her discretion amongst my children.

Item. I will to my eldest son a double portion of the remainder of my estate, to be allotted to him in the moiety of my dwelling house, the remainder to be my wife's thirds.

Item. I will that my eldest son shall have liberty to purchase my dwelling, homestead, tan-yard, orchard, with all the appurtenances, with ten acres of meadow, and half the wood-lot at Fresh Marshes, together with all other parcels of land that the rest of my children shall set to sale.

Item. I will that my eldest son, with my wife, shall have the improvement of said dwelling, tan-yard, stock, etc., until such time as my overseers hereafter mentioned shall see reason to divide my estate.

Item. That the rest of my children be equal sharers in the remaining part of my estate.

Item. That my eldest daughter Jemima have fifty or sixty pounds (half in money, the other in accommodable pay) within one year after my decease, in part of her portion.

Item. I will that one of my sons be brought up to learning at the cost of my executor, which son thus educated shall acquit my executor of the moiety of his dividend. My children I will to be well educated on the improvement of my estate.

Lastly, I will that my dear wife, with my eldest son Edward, be executrix and executor, and that William Stoughton Esq., and Mr. Thomas Holman would be pleased to be overseers of this my last will and testament, who together with my executrix and executor may appoint the time and manner for the division of my estate. In witness whereof, I set to my hand and seal the day of the date above mentioned.

91. IV. EDWARD BASS.—The following is taken from the "History of Dorchester":

Edward Bass, son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Breck) Bass, of Dorchester, and great-great-grand-son of Samuel and Ann Bass, of Roxbury, was born in Dorchester, November 23d, 1726. He entered Harvard College at the early age of thirteen, and graduated in 1744. From the time of taking his first degree till he received that of Master of Arts, he was engaged in keeping school—a part of the time in Dorchester—and also occupied himself in such studies as would qualify him for his contemplated profession. From 1747 to 1751, he resided at the college, making progress in theological studies and occasionally supplying vacant pulpits in the Congregational churches. In 1751, he was chosen assistant minister of St. Paul's Church (Episcopal) in Newburyport, and in 1752 went to England, where, on the 24th of May of the same year, he was ordained by Dr. Thomas Sherlock, then Bishop of London. In the autumn of the same year, he returned to New England, and soon after took charge of the church in Newbury, at that time vacant by the death of Rev. Matthias Plant. He married Sarah Breck, September 19th, 1754. She died on the 9th of May, 1789. In July of that year, the University of Pennsylvania conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. On the 18th of November following (1789) he married Mercy Phillips, who died, his widow, January 15th, 1842, in her 87th year. In 1796, he was elected the first Bishop of Massachusetts, and was consecrated to that office in Christ Church, Philadelphia, the 7th of May, 1797, by the bishops of the Episcopal churches in Pennsylvania, New York and Maryland. The Episcopal churches of Rhode Island afterwards elected him as their bishop, as did those also of New Hampshire in 1803, the year of his decease. He died on the 10th of September, aged 77, after an illness of but two days. He was a man of profound knowledge, accomplished and exemplary. He was also noted for his good humor and wit. The following anecdotes have been related of him. At the time of his second marriage he was 63 years of age; his wife Mercy was 34. Some of his people expressed their astonishment at his marrying so young a woman. The Bishop replied, "I will have Mercy and not sacrifice." When asked why he did not settle in his native town, he answered facetiously that "the waters of Dorchester were not deep enough for a bass to swim in, and therefore he came to the Merrimac." He had no children.

110. III. ROBERT BRECK, REV., OF MARLBORO, MASS.—The following extract from the Boston Weekly Journal, 18th January, 1731, is taken from "Annals of the American Pulpit":

Robert Breck was born in Dorchester, Mass., December 7th, 1682. He was the son of Capt. John Breck, a very ingenious and worthy man, and grandson of Edward Breck, who came from England, and settled in Dorchester in 1636. After the death of his father he was sent to Harvard College, where he was graduated in 1700. Having received license to preach, he was engaged for some time in preaching on Long Island, in the then Province of New York, during the administration of Lord Cranbury, and notwithstanding he was then a very young man, he maintained with great vigor and courage the principles of the Nonconformists. He, however, after a while, for reasons not now known, withdrew from that field of labor and returned to Massachusetts, where he spent nearly his whole life. He was ordained October 25th, 1704, at Marlborough, Mass., as successor to the Rev. William Brimsmead, and after a ministry of twenty-six years, died there January 6th, 1731, in the forty-ninth year of his age. He was married to Elizabeth Wainwright, of Haverhill, in September, 1707, who survived him about five years. They had six children, one of whom, Robert, was for many years minister of Springfield, and another was married to the Rev. Ebenezer Parkman, pastor of the church at Westborough. There were three sermons preached to his bereaved flock on the occasion of his death—all of which were published—one by the Rev. John Swift, of Framingham, another by the Rev. John Prentice, of Lancaster, and a third by the Rev. Israel Loring, of Sudbury. It was an evidence of the high estimation in which he was held, that in October, previous to his death, when his disease had assumed an alarming character, a day of fasting and prayer was observed in his church with special reference to his case, several of the neighboring ministers were present to conduct the services.

Mr. Breck published an Election Sermon, 1728, and a Sacramental Sermon, entitled, "The Danger of Falling Away After a Profession," 1728.

The following is from the Boston Weekly News-Letter, of June, 1731:

As a clergyman, he was an able minister of the New Testament, and he obtained mercy to be faithful; the Holy Ghost, who made him an overseer having richly furnished him with grace and gifts for that sacred office.

The classes or association of ministers he belonged to, hung much of their glory on him, had an high esteem of his judgment upon all emergencies that came before them, and he likewise took care upon all occasions with great courage and prudence to support the honor and rights of the Presbytery, when he thought them invaded or any ways diminished.

His firm persuasion of the validity of a Presbyterian ordination was not taken upon trust, or the mere produce of education, but the effect of a deliberate choice, and judgment founded upon his diligent search into the practice of the primitive church, comparing the best arguments on both sides; and above all, the sacred institutions, as they are found in the Acts and Epistles of the Holy Apostles. At the same time, he was a candid, catholic spirit, far from being rigid or censorious; but he dare not receive for doctrine the commandments of men. He had much at heart, the constitution of religion and the churches of New England, and often expressed his apprehension of their dangers from more quarters than one.

As to his learning, I suppose it will be no offence to say, there were few of his standing that were even his equals; he was such a master of the learned languages, that he could and did frequently, to the capacity of his family read a chapter from the Hebrew Bible into English, and the Greek was still easier to him.

His attainments in philosophy, especially the mathematics, were above the common rate, in the study whereof, whenever he met with anything difficult or perplexed, his genius and close application soon overcame it.

He was well versed in history, both civil and ecclesiastical, especially of our own nation. His religion was vital and undisguised. Pride, hypocrisy and affectation were his aversion, and covetousness was what he was a stranger to. His temper was grave and thoughtful, and yet cheerful at times, especially with his friends and acquaintance, and his conversation entertaining and agreeable. In his conduct he was prudent and careful of his character, both as a minister and a Christian; rather sparing of speech, and more inclined to hear and learn from others.

His house was open to strangers, and his heart to his friends, and he took great delight in entertaining such as he might anyway improve them, and treated them with good manners. He was a lover of good government and good order, and would express himself with warmth against that levelling spirit which too much prevails.

The languishment and pains he went through before his death were very great, but God enabled him to bear the affliction with patience and submission.

The following is taken from the "History of the Town of Marlborough," Middlesex County, Massachusetts, by Charles Hudson, a native of the town:

The people of Marlborough had been prosperous and happy under the ministry of Rev. Robert Breck, and being ardently attached to him, they had anticipated his wants and ministered to his comfort. When, by the depreciation of currency, his salary became insufficient for his support, they readily raised it from sixty to one hundred pounds. But earthly happiness is of short duration. On the 6th of January, 1731, they were called to experience a severe affliction in the death of their beloved pastor. Mr. Breck had for a considerable time been unable to supply the pulpit, and the town had generously paid for the supply. And when he was taken away, they manifested their regard for his memory by appropriating fifty pounds to defray the expenses of his burial.

Before Mr. Breck's settlement in Marlborough, he preached for a time on Long Island, in the Province of New York, during the government of Lord Cranbury, where he had the courage, though young at that time, to assert and adhere to the cause and principles of the Nonconformists, notwithstanding the threatenings and ill treatment he there met with.

"He was a man of strong natural powers, clear-headed, and of sound judgment, and by his unwearied diligence and study, he obtained great skill in the learned languages (uncommon in the Hebrew, using to read out of the Hebrew Bible to his family,) as also in philosophy, the mathematics and history, as well as in divinity, in which he was sound and orthodox, a good casuist, a strong disputant, a methodical and close preacher."

The highest testimonials of his worth appeared in the periodicals of the day, and his brethren in the ministry paid a just tribute to his memory.

* * * * *

Mr. Breck was a faithful and devoted minister, and was highly respected and esteemed, and his abilities were well known and acknowledged. He preached the Election Sermon in 1728, which was published. His text was the well known passage, "Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." In the discourse he labored to show that fear, or trust in God, was not only "the beginning of wisdom," but the source of safety and happiness, for individuals and for communities, and after reminding our rulers that the obligation to comply with the requisition of the text was increased by their exalted stations, on the true democratic principle he appeals to the fountain of power, the people, in the following manner:

"I shall conclude when I have briefly addressed myself to the people of this land, that they would lay these things to heart, and strenuously apply themselves to seek their own and posterity's welfare and happiness, in the way and method in our text prescribed. Without you, all that our rulers in civil and sacred orders can do, will not avail. Though our legislature enact never so many good laws for the regulation of the morals of the people, unless you do your part, and improve the power and liberty you are invested with, in your several towns, to make choice of such for your grand jurors, tythingmen, etc., as are men fearing God, men of truth and fidelity, men of wisdom, equal to the trust committed to them, and have the interest of religion at heart, who will carefully inspect the manners of the people, and bring the transgressors to open shame and punishment; I say, unless you are careful and conscientious in this, all our laws for the reforming of the manners and morals of a corrupt people are insufficient, and our law-makers labor in vain.

"Oh, that there were such an heart in this people to fear God and keep His commandments, and to exert themselves in their several capacities so to promote the peace and prosperity of our church and state; to put up cries to our fathers' God, that he would pour out his spirit of repentance and reformation on their degenerate offspring. Then the Lord our God will be with us, as he was with our fathers, and never leave us nor forsake us."

In 1720, he delivered the first sermon ever preached in Shrewsbury. During his ministry "The Marlborough Association" was formed, consisting of six or eight of the neighboring clergymen. Of this Association Mr. Breck was a leading member, and his house was the usual place of their meetings.

The best proof of his fidelity is found in his works. In the course of his ministry of twenty-seven years, there were two hundred and eighty-six persons admitted to his church, and one thousand and seventy-seven received the rite of baptism. And what furnished better evidence of his wisdom and prudence than anything else is the fact that in 1727 and 1728, when many churches were rent in twain by what was denominated Newlightism, he continued to keep everything quiet in his parish. He knew enough of human nature, and of the order of Providence, to be sensible that there would be times in which the human mind would be specially called and awakened to subjects of a religious nature; and instead of opposing this general spirit of inquiry, or of calling in others to increase the flame, he wisely took the whole matter into his own hands and guided the inquirers in his own town; and, without any convulsion, during these two years, added one hundred and two to his church. If ministers would learn not to oppose any spirit of awakening when the minds of their people are alive to the subject of religion, but would guide and lead it in its true channel; if, instead of calling in foreign aid to awaken an interest in religion by artificial means, they would preach with earnestness the simple doctrines of the meek and lowly Jesus, they would do more towards placing their churches on the firm basis of the Rock of Ages.

The influence of Mr. Breck over his people was highly salutary. When he came to the place he found them in a state of distraction; but under his ministry these animosities were forgotten and his flock seemed desirous of dwelling together in unity. Thus, with the characteristics of a good citizen and a good minister, he administered to their temporal and spiritual welfare, and by precept and example impressed upon them a truth too often overlooked or forgotten, that he who loves God must love his brother also. He was sincerely beloved by his people who, during his last sickness set apart a day for fasting and prayer for his recovery, several of the neighboring ministers being present and assisting in that solemn service. But their prayers did not prevail. He died January 6th, 1731, in the twenty-eighth year of his ministry, in the midst of his days and usefulness, being forty-nine years of age.

A handsome monument was erected to his memory near that of his predecessor, containing a somewhat lengthy inscription in Latin, which has thus been translated into English. As it appears to contain a just representation of his character, we give it entire:

"Beneath this stone are deposited the mortal remains of the truly Reverend Robert Breck. His immortal part hath ascended to heaven to join the innumerable company of angels and the spirits of the just made perfect.

"He was by nature a man of acute intellect, capacious mind, and sound judgment, together with singular mental resolution. As to his attainments, he was eminently skilled in the learned languages, familiar beyond the common measure with polite literature; and what to others was difficult, he by the power of his mind and close application to study, accomplished with ease. Thoroughly versed in every department of theology, and truly orthodox in sentiment, he was a scribe in every respect instructed unto the Kingdom of Heaven. The duties of the pastoral office in the church at Marlborough, over which the Holy Ghost made him overseer, he discharged faithfully and assiduously, in peace and with great reputation for twenty-seven years.

"He was a skillful and able asserter of the doctrines of Revelation, and of the worship and discipline of the New England churches. He was a counsellor in cases of difficulty, both public and private, of distinguished uprightness and consummate prudence. He was a sincere lover of his friends, his country, and the whole church of Christ.

"In a word, he was a model of piety and every social virtue, and of moderation in regard to earthly things.

"In the severe pains of his last sickness his patience had its perfect work, and his departure, if not in triumph, was full of hope and peace.

"Born December 7th, 1682; died January 6th, 1731.

"Even the prophets do not live forever."

The following extract from the account of the dinner on occasion of the 200th anniversary of the incorporation of the town of Marlborough is taken from the same volume. Toasts being in order:

THE MEMORY OF HON. JOHN DAVIS—The only Governor of the State and United States Senator the borough towns ever produced.

This sentiment called forth the following response from A. McF. Davis, Esq., of Worcester:

"Mr. President—No more grateful task could be assigned to a son than to respond on such an occasion as this to a sentiment like the one just proposed.

"Many of my earliest recollections are twined around the old homestead of Deacon Isaac Davis, in Northborough, where my father was born, and to which, in after life, he was accustomed to pay frequent visits. The activity of a useful life, the greater part of which was spent in the service of the public, and the excitement of participating in the great events and stirring scenes of our country's history, during that period, never effaced, nor even dimmed his fondness for that spot; and Tomblin Hill, Hop Brook, and the Plain were always welcome sights to his eye.

"Although his visits to this portion of Northborough, which contained the home of his childhood, were more frequent than those to the village, yet he would often in the course of his drive take a look at the center of the town, and stopping at the old burial ground near the Unitarian Church, linger for awhile examining the condition of the family monuments erected there. Sometimes, too, leaving behind him the village of Northborough, so cosily nestled in the valley of the Assabet, he would climb the hills of Marlborough to search the records traced in stone which tell where the remains of three generations of his ancestors lie deposited in the old cemeteries of this village.

"Among the names of those ancestors, perhaps none is more familiar in the history of Marlborough than that of Robert Breck, the second minister of this place. The prominence of his name in the annals of this town, and the frequent allusions to it to-day, render any further reference to him on my part a work of supererogation.

"His daughter Sarah, my great-great grandmother, was married to Dr. Gott, a physician, concerning whom we learn, from an obituary notice published in the Boston News-Letter, of August 1st, 1751 that he was a man of great learning, who was "peculiarly faithful to his patients, moderate in his charges, and charitable to the poor." Certainly he must have been a popular doctor.

"Rev. Dr. Allen has related to you to-day an anecdote handed down in our family of Robert Breck's habit of reading from a Hebrew Bible every morning and translating as he read. Of Dr. Gott it is said, that he kept alive his knowledge of Latin, as did the Rev. Robert Breck his of Hebrew, by reading from a Latin Bible every morning, and rendering into English as he read.

"How many of the descendants of these learned men, who, in the backwoods of the Massachusetts Colony, thus diligently cultivated their knowledge of the dead languages, could perform the same feat to-day?

"Of Dr. Samuel Brigham, the husband of Anna, daughter of Dr. Gott, I shall leave the descendants of that name, of whom so many are present to-day, to tell you more. His daughter Anna was the wife of Deacon Isaac Davis, my grandfather, who had come to Northborough to teach the inhabitants of that borough how to make leather. Married to her and settled down on the old "Tomblin farm," he remained in the home of his adoption to the time of his death. With his trade of tanning, he combined that of farming. He attained a prominent position among his fellow-citizens, and represented them for years in the General Court. In common with many others at that time, he entertained a decided hostility towards lawyers, and in 1785, he was selected as an appropriate representative of the sentiments of the town of Northborough to act at a County Convention, to be holden at Leicester. His instructions were, amongst other things, to vote for a petition to the General Court for the annihilation of lawyers. Very fortunately, this hostility did not prevent my father from following the profession of his choice.

"Although I cannot claim either of the boroughs as my birthplace, still, family associations cluster so closely around the hills of Marlborough and the valley of Northborough, that they vindicate my claim as a descendant of the boroughs, to be with you to-day, and to share with you in the pleasures of this festival."

160. IV. JOHN BRECK, OF BOSTON.—The following is taken from a letter of Samuel Breck, [360], of Philadelphia, to Edward Cruft, [161,] of Boston, under date of 17th December, 1847:

"John, your great-grandfather, on your mother's side, died on the 16th February, 1713, aged 32. I have one of the mourning rings, distributed as was the custom at that period, by those who could afford it, among the relations of the deceased. One cousin, Daniel Breck, now one of the three judges of the supreme court of Kentucky, has another, which he obtained of his father, at my request. The ring is gold with a rich topaz on the top, and a mourning band in black, ornamentally encircling it, on which is beautifully inscribed in gold letters, thus: 'Died, John Breck, on the 16th February, 1713, aged 32.' How many children John left besides his son, our grandfather, I do not know. That son was named John also, I think. He resided in Boston and was concerned largely, I believe, in the Newfoundland or mackerel fishery. He had an extensive cooperage, and left three sons and four daughters. To the sons he gave a good education, particularly to the youngest, named Daniel, who graduated at Princeton College about the year 1774.

Daniel became a Congregational minister, and being a public-spirited man, he accompanied, as chaplain in the Army of the Revolution, General Montgomery into Canada, in the regiment of Colonel Porter, and was with it at a battle near Quebec. In the midst of the dying by the sword and small-pox, he fulfilled his duty rigidly as their spiritual physician.

He received at the peace of 1783 some bounty lands in the Northwestern Territory, then a dense forest and the residence of Indians only, but now converted into five great and thriving states. I well remember his letter, dated from those lands which he visited in 1788, and preached where Marietta now stands on the Ohio, the first sermon that was ever delivered in that vast wilderness. His letter, giving an account of that event, was directed to my father. His text was Luke 1, 33: 'And of His kingdom there shall be no end.'

You must recollect this very worthy uncle. He was born in Boston in 1748, and settled in middle life at Hartland, in Vermont, where he died 12th August, 1845, aged 97.

His friend and biographer at Hartland says that he was a man of strong nerve, morally and physically courageous, the friend of good order, virtue and religion, always respectful, courteous and attentive to his manners. The name of God he could not hear taken in vain, in high life or low life, without a prompt and decided reproof, frequently remarking that in addition to its being offensive to Christianity, it was gross and vulgar.

He received from Congress in the latter portion of his life a military pension for his early services in Canada."

190. IV. ROBERT BRECK, REV., OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—
The following is taken from "Annals of the American Pulpit":

Robert Breck was a son of the Rev. Robert Breck, of Marlborough, Mass., and was born July 25th, 1713. He was graduated at Harvard College in 1730, at the early age of 17. He is supposed to have studied theology under the direction of his father.

The Breck controversy was the occasion of three very spirited pamphlets; two by the association of the county, and one by the ordaining council; and these pamphlets contain nearly everything that is known upon the subject.

He had through life the reputation of being thoroughly an American. Jonathan Edwards and he belonged to the same association, and sometimes shot barbed arrows at each other.

Mr. Breck's publications are a sermon preached in the Brattle Street Church Boston, 1748, a sermon preached at Springfield on the day which completed a century from the burning of the town by the Indians, 1775; a sermon preached at Amherst at the funeral of the Rev. David Parsons, 1781; a sermon preached at Longmeadow, at the funeral of the Rev. Stephen Williams, D.D., 1782; a sermon preached at Amherst at the ordination of the Rev. David Parsons, 1782.

The following is from Mr. Lathrop's sermon at Mr. Breck's funeral:

"His intellectual powers, which were naturally superior, were brightened by his education and enlarged by an extensive acquaintance with men and books. As he accustomed himself to a close manner of reasoning and thinking, and filled up his time with diligent application, so he acquired a rich furniture of the most useful knowledge. History was his amusement, divinity his study; he excelled in the knowledge of both, especially the latter.

"His natural disposition was remarkably cheerful and pleasant, and his conversation was exceedingly instructive and entertaining, sometimes enlivened with a little well-timed humor, but always consistent with the society of the Christian and the dignity of the minister. He was easy of access, given to hospitality, faithful in his friendships, tender and attentive in all domestic relations, compassionate to the distressed, and a lover of mankind. In a word he was an accomplished gentleman and an exemplary Christian. As a member of society he studied the things which make for the common peace and happiness, with a just sense of the necessity of subordination and good government. He abhorred all tyranny in state and usurpation in church, and was a steady advocate for true, rational liberty in both. In the ministerial orb he shone the brightest. He knew how to move within his sphere and how to fill his circle. His attendance on the duties of his profession was constant, his preparations for the sanctuary were mature, his public prayers were deliberate and solemn, his sermons were filled with sentiment, his thoughts pertinent, naturally arranged, comprised within a narrow compass, dressed in the most proper language, and communicated in the easiest manner. His addresses were familiar and affectionate, and his reproofs plain and pungent, and delivered with such a happy mixture of boldness and tenderness that they were often effectual, never offensive. His religious sentiments were formed on a careful examination of the Scriptures, without servile attachments to sects or systems. His turn of thinking was liberal, yet Scriptural; exalted, yet humble.

"His sense of human weakness and depravity led him to admire the gracious provision of the Gospel, which, in his public discourses, he was careful to represent, both in its suitableness to relieve the guilt and imbecility of fallen creatures, and in its tendency to promote real holiness of heart and life.

"The greatness and benevolence of his mind raised him superior to that bigotry which has sometimes dishonored a Christian profession. Steady in his own principles, he was candid toward such as differed from him, and disposed to charitable thoughts of such as seemed to have the spirit of the Gospel, though they might err in speculation. If ever he was severe against opinions it was when he apprehended them to be of licentious tendency.

"His knowledge of human nature enabled him to conduct himself with singular prudence and contributed much to his uncommon usefulness in his station. As his judgment was highly valued and his integrity respected, so he was often consulted in cases of difficulty, and was often the happy instrument of preventing or healing dangerous contentions.

"In him the young minister and candidate, acting with becoming modesty and seriousness, was sure to find a patron and friend. While he despised the assuming airs of vanity and self-confidence, he loved to encourage modest worth.

"As he was a lover of mankind in general, so he had a most ardent affection for the people of his own charge, and from them experienced as warm a return. In the beginning of the last summer, he found his constitution, which was naturally slender, sensibly failing. Though his people and friends flattered themselves, they could not flatter him, with the hope of his recovery. He often, both in public and private with the greatest imaginable composure, expressed his apprehension that the time of his departure was very near. Anxious for the welfare of his people, he protracted his public labors till weakness constrained him to desist, and then on a small return of strength, resumed them again. It was his earnest desire that he might not long survive his usefulness, and Heaven was pleased to grant his request.

"Through the course of his lingering illness, he retained much of his natural cheerfulness, exercised the most exemplary patience, calmly noticed every new symptom of approaching death, to which, when it arrived, he resigned himself with the dignity of a Christian. He spoke in humblest terms of himself, but professed an entire reliance on Divine mercy through a Mediator, knowing whom he had believed, and conscious that through grace his conversation had been in Godly sincerity.

"The removal of Mr. Breck is a sensible loss to all of the neighboring churches, but especially to the people to whom he was immediately related."

The following is taken from "Springfield Memories," by Mason A. Greene:

THE BRECK CONTROVERSY.—The most peculiar episode in Springfield story, and one little dwelt upon in the books, is the church feud of one hundred and forty years ago, which ended in the settlement of Rev. Robert Breck over the first parish. Radical in speculation and daring in its expression, Rev. Robert Breck found himself at twenty-two years of age in a strange neighborhood, confronted by Jonathan Edwards and the stiff theology of the river. In a sermon at New London he had charitably said, "What will become of the heathen who never heard of the Gospel, I do not pretend to say, but I cannot but indulge a hope that God in His boundless benevolence will find out a way whereby those heathen who act up to the light they have, may be saved."

The news of this alarming hope came to Springfield through a letter of Rev. Mr. Williams, of Mansfield, Conn., who referred to the Rev. Messrs. Clap and Kirtland as persons willing to testify to Mr. Breck's unfitness for the ministry. As the matter grew serious, other and earlier sins were added to the list. He doubted the inspiration of the eighth chapter of John; he had called Mr. Clap a liar; he believed that there was no difference between historical and saving faith; that there might be articles of faith not contained in the scriptures; that there was no encouragement to duty if God's decrees were absolute; that God might forgive sin without any satisfaction, etc., etc. These he had only expressed before he was of age, in discussions, and were not given as his settled belief.

In the minds of the river gods, heterodoxy was his crime, and when he came to Springfield in 1734 he found them eyeing him with suspicion. In August, the Springfield church called Rev. Mr. Breck. Two months later the objections to his settlement were read before the Hampshire Association at Suffield, and the matter here dropped, as the church did not accept Mr. Breck's terms. But in November it came up again.

In August, the Springfield church called Rev. Mr. Breck. The day set for the ordination was Wednesday, October 8th, 1735. (O. S.) The weather had been cold and doors were closed throughout the colony. The slice, fire broom, backlog, and the pent up aroma of baked beans and "brewins" again lent an added charm to New England home life.

A week before the meeting, the Rev. Messrs. Cooper, Welsted and Mather, of Boston, and Cook, of Sudbury, undertook the journey through the woods to Springfield. The prospect for a friendly reception was as cheerless as the weather. Cooper and Welsted called on Mr. Williams at Longmeadow, where they found it would be fruitless to call upon the Hatfield Williams. The result was that the two parties kept coldly apart, which in point of Christian courtesy the local ministry should not have allowed. The Longmeadow Williams was more conservative, and at least more consistent, than his Hatfield namesake.

The ordaining ministers were at Madam Brewer's (on the site of Fallon's Block.) Her daughter, Miss Eunice Brewer, was then at home, and here boarded the young accused. These two young people were pretty well agreed on things beside theology, and a novelist might have a good word to say about it, for she was a Chauncey, descendant of the Chauncey who came over with William the Conqueror, and whose family married into the Saxon line of kings, and up in the cemetery in this city is a pre-revolutionary gravestone with this inscription: "Mrs. Eunice Breck, the virtuous consort of the Rev. Robert Breck, and daughter of the Rev. Daniel Brewer."

The council, consisting of Chauncey, of Hadley; Devotion, of Suffield; Rand, of Sunderland; Cooper, Welsted and Samuel Mather, of Boston; and Cook, of Sudbury, met with closed doors in a chamber of the parsonage on the morning of October 7th. The Hatfield Williams was also included in the letters missive, but he declined the invitation. Rev. Mr. Cooper was chosen moderator. The "dissatisfied brethren" of the Springfield church being asked to appear against Breck, wished a delay until 3 P. M., when they presented their charges, but declined the proofs, as the council, they claimed, was not legal. This was going farther than Edwards had advised, but the feverish state of public opinion had had its effect upon them. The hostile ministers had arrived, bringing with them some justices from Northampton. They all put up at one tavern with some strangers, when they were visited by the "dissatisfied," and many curious rumors were afloat. The next morning, Wednesday, 8th, the council insisted on proofs to the charge preferred, and were refused; but the information was volunteered that the Rev. Messrs. Clap and Kirtland, from Connecticut, were in the village, and that they were Mr. Breck's principal accusers. A brisk word and pen discussion followed between the council and these gentlemen, resulting in the latter's making a written statement. As this was the day set for the ordination "the usual preparations for entertainment" were postponed.

The hostile parties in this singular contest thus found themselves face to face. Mr. Clap, afterwards president of Yale College, began to read, and Mr. Breck undertook to answer him as he proceeded, which was not allowed. The secret chamber trial, was indeed a memorable scene—seven wigged judges, two accusing wigs from another state, and the broad-shouldered, high-bred, generous-hearted boy minister, whose large inspirations had charmed a village congregation and given a shock to the Connecticut river Calvinism.

Mr. Clap proceeded, and was again interrupted by a messenger who had arrived on horseback. They held a private conference, and he rode away with "convenient speed." The suspicion that Clap had divulged something to an outsider was confirmed by the appearance of an officer for Breck's arrest as Mr. Clap finished, and just as Breck was on his feet for a reply. Holland, in his "History of Western Massachusetts, says: After they had assembled, the sheriff with his posse marched to the house where they were in session, surrounded it with his force, and then with a drawn sword in his hand, entered the room where the council were examining the candidate. Then, in his majesty's name, he arrested Mr. Breck, and ordered him to prepare himself immediately for a journey to New London. He adds that Mr. Breck offered bail, which the sheriff first refused and then accepted. But a sheriff doesn't have any power to take bail in such cases, and as the warrant was not for his appearance at New London, but before the justices, there is evidently more paint than history in this account. The prisoner was taken to the town-house on Sanford street, amid the wildest excitement. Violence was threatened, but through the wise advice of members of the council this was prevented.

Meantime, the astonished body of ordainers, finding themselves with no one to ordain, sent a couple of their number to the town-house with a respectful protest against these violent proceedings, and claiming that they were a regular council trying Breck on the self-same charges that caused his arrest.

The prisoner, however, was detained until evening, when he was released on the word of several of the council that he would return when summoned. The next morning (the 9th) the ordaining council began its third day's session, but it was again interrupted by a summons from the justices.

By this time the dissatisfied had won their case at the town-house, and the justices had signed the warrant for Breck's removal to New London, a number of the church being chosen to accompany him in "token of respect." There was the wildest excitement as he approached the street from the town-house in the custody of the officer.

Again the council was called to check this popular indignation, and the following morning, October 10th, the church undertook a private conference of prayer, but finally the doors of the meeting house were thrown open, and a characteristic New England scene, a public meeting of humiliation before God, followed:

This was Friday, and we have the simple chronicle that it was a "large and weeping assembly" which listened to "a seasonable discourse." The next morning—for in those days, through prayer, or something or other, people had a way of bringing things to pass—Mr. Breck returned from New London, acquitted, and there was great felicitation among the people. The council still in session announced Mr. Breck orthodox, but the ordination was postponed. Another and successful attempt at ordination occurred in January, 1736. Rev. Mr. Cooper delivered the sermon.

In April, Mr. Breck crowned his success by leading to the altar the daughter of his predecessor, and his strong and simple ways, his rugged manner of putting the essentials of religion, and forgetting the rest, soon disarmed his enemies, though they were slow in yielding. A month later they petitioned the justices to compel the church to settle an orthodox minister. The warrant under this petition is in the hands of Richard Beebe, of this city, but the matter was never pressed. On the 22d of March, Mr. Breck had a talk with D. and John Chapin of the "dissatisfied," and they expressed themselves after the interview as "just as much dissatisfied as ever." But Mr. Breck grew and during forty-nine years of good preaching the church grew with him, and he now lies with his congregation up in the cemetery, having made a generous contribution towards liberal Christianity.

But the best of it is that in those days men came honestly by their differences, though they had unpleasantly peculiar ways of propagating their notions. After it was all over, it was good to see Mr. Breck asking his enemy, the Longmeadow Williams, to officiate at his marriage, and to hear the noble man of God, as he grasps the young minister's hand, say, "Brother Breck, I had objections to your settlement, but I know no reason why you should not marry"; and he married them. When the time came, Mr. Breck returned the compliment, as Dickens' lore would say, by preaching Mr. Williams' funeral sermon.

Clipping from the Springfield, Mass., Republican, of May 27th, 1887:

In May, 1694, Rev. Daniel Brewer, aged 24, a Harvard graduate, began a pastorate of nearly 40 years at Springfield. He was a man of many spiritual graces, and a good example of early New England piety. He married Catherine Chauncey, and the pair became the progenitors of all the Brewers of this section. Mr. Brewer was born at Roxbury, which predisposed the Springfield people towards him, as it was the ancestral home of so many Springfield people. A glimpse of early modes of living is found in the dry account books of the Pyncheon store, where the minister is charged with various purchases of barley malt, lace, "Manchester beys" and "dimity." If one were to compare Mr. Glover and Mr. Brewer it might be said that the one was an impressive and aggressive man, and the other a lovable man; one courtly and the other saintly.

200. REV. EBENEZER PARKMAN, m. 7th July, 1724, for his first wife, Mary Champney, (b. 19th May, 1699); she d. 29th Jan., 1736. The following is taken from the "Worcester Association and its Antecedents," by Jos. Allen:

Rev. Mr. Parkman was the father of the well-known Boston merchant Samuel Parkman, Esq., and grandfather of the late Rev. Dr. Francis Parkman, the respected and lamented minister of the New North Church, Boston. Rev. Elisha Rockwood, one of the successors of Mr. Parkman in the ministry, and who married one of his granddaughters, speaks of him in the following terms:

"His preaching was evangelical, his deportment dignified, and in his daily intercourse with his people, he was distinguished for dropping those words which are as apples of gold in pictures of silver.

"From an examination of a number of manuscript sermons of Mr. Parkman, which have come into my possession, I should judge that he was for the age in which he lived, a respectable scholar, a good writer, and a man of a catholic spirit, as were most of the ministers of the Marlborough Association. He was much respected by his own people and in the neighboring churches, and he left for his children and friends a name without reproach."

500. V. MARGARET (BRECK) NICKELS, is buried at the cemetery in Eastport, Maine, where a monument is erected to her memory, and that of her husband and son. It stands on the left-hand side of the avenue leading from the second or north gate, and very near to the traveled path. It is now in a good state of preservation though needing to be cleaned. There is also a foot-stone with the initials, M. N., W. N., and G. W. S. The following is an exact copy of the inscription on the stone:

670. V. WILLIAM BRECK, OF CLAREMONT, N. H.—Extract from a letter of his son James, [890], to Joseph Breck, [1290], of Boston, under date of 4th September, 1849:

"My father married the daughter of Dr. William Thomas, of Plymouth, Mass., in 1772. Was then in the hardware business. In those stringent times and the years of the Revolution, like thousands of others, became reduced to a small share of this world's goods. In 1792, left Boston with his family, ten in number, embracing four sons and four daughters, and settled upon a small farm in Claremont, N. H. By industry and economy obtained a comfortable support through life, and died in November, 1819, aged 74, leaving to his children that rich inheritance, an unspotted character, with a conscience unsullied, resting in hope for another world. My oldest brother, William, and four sisters, remained upon the old homestead, and were never married."

690. V. SAMUEL BRECK, OF BOSTON, AND LATER, OF PHILADELPHIA.—The following extracts are taken from a letter of his son, Samuel Breck, [940], of Philadelphia, to Edward Cruft, [167], of Boston, under date of 17th December, 1847:

"My father was brought up as a merchant, and in that capacity acted as agent to the army and fleets of Louis XVI. That highly respectable parent was much beloved and esteemed in Boston. For seven consecutive years he was elected a member of the General Court, and sat in the Boston seat when only seven representatives from that town occupied it. In 1792, he moved his family to Philadelphia, and became a director of the Bank of United States.

"In manners, he was an accomplished gentleman of the old school; polite and generous in the exercise of hospitality. Kind parent, kind husband, and valuable citizen in every respect, he lived for many years in his new abode. He married a daughter of Benjamin Andrews, Esq., of Boston, by whom he had eight children.

"But before I speak of them let me say a word of my father's sisters. They were four in number: Mrs. Nickels, the grandmother of Robert G. Shaw, of your city; she died aged 87, and was a worthy woman. Mrs. Harris, who died aged about 86, was an excellent woman, also. Next was Mrs. Fitch, who married a clergyman, and died aged 48. Then comes your good and estimable mother, who died aged 89. I may say in passing, that my dear mother died aged 83, and her brother, John Andrews, about the same age.

"I have the mourning ring of his father, who was my maternal grandfather, to whom I have alluded as Benjamin Andrews."

From a letter of the same to Samuel Breck, [1650], of Bridgewater, under date of 28th March, 1851:

"My father was induced to remove from Boston in 1792, (after a very agreeable visit to Philadelphia, where Congress was then located, and where he purchased a house,) in consequence of excessive and unequal taxation. Boston at that date contained 18,030 inhabitants. It had no watch, no lamps, no sidewalks; and yet they taxed him, because he made a show of great wealth, by his generous hospitality to strangers, twelve hundred dollars a year."

Extract from a letter of the same to his nephew Rev. Charles Breck, [1540], under date of 18th September, 1847:

"My father was a high-bred gentleman of the old school, replete in his manners with refined politeness, keeping his house open to the hospitable reception of much company, and doing the honors of the town by elegant and liberal entertainment, male and female, of all distinguished strangers, both during his residence in Boston, and in Philadelphia, when Congress held their sessions in the latter city.

"He kept his town and country house, a handsome equipage, with servants in livery, and was surrounded by every comfort that belongs to a polite, genteel and fashionable style of living. At his death I wrote the following notice of him:

"His uniform urbanity, extensive usefulness and kind disposition, caused him to be respected and loved by all who knew him. In Boston, his native town, he was distinguished for the attention he paid to strangers of all nations, receiving them with great cordiality and courtesy, devoting his entire leisure to the noble duties of hospitality. In the Revolutionary War he took a decided part with his country, and soon after the French Alliance he received from the ministry of Louis XVI. the appointment of general agent for the fleets of his most Christian majesty. This office he held until the peace of 1783, about which period his townsmen elected him a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, and for seven successive years he sat upon the Boston seat in that assembly.

"In 1786, he was deputed by the General Court of his native state to meet a Commercial Congress then about to assemble at Annapolis, but which, while he was on his way to it, was postponed in consequence of a more enlarged plan having produced the Grand Convention of 1787, by which our present national constitution was formed. He was subsequently an active adjunct in manufacturing projects, such as sail-cloth, glass, etc., and in the erection of a bridge at Charlestown—the parent of American hydraulic architecture. In 1792, he removed to Philadelphia, then the capital of the United States, and the grand rendezvous of fashion, intelligence and commerce, and there he resided in the exercise of his social virtues until his death.

"His mind and his discourse were calm, temperate and rational, so that amid the political divisions of his day he preserved a composed demeanor and equanimity of thought, supported by sound and encouraging argument, which, while it soothed his own bosom, taught the doubting to hope and the rash to ponder. And thus he drew comfort from events the most disastrous in appearance, always relying with unalterable confidence on the wisdom of Providence. Generous, disinterested, scrupulously exact in the minutest obligation, he never suffered any one to call twice for a debt, nor even wait a moment for his convenience. "A poor man's time," he would say, "is his riches, and if I detain him, I rob him." With these sentiments of kindness and principles of justice, his intercourse with every one was harmonious, cheerful and dignified. He looked with a discerning eye upon the stirring events of his day, and made their probable result the rule of his action.

“In his last sickness he conversed with calmness upon his approaching death, and arranged his worldly affairs with a tranquil mind, and the deliberation of an honest agent about to quit the functions of office.”

“On his tomb was inscribed what follows, but which was subsequently removed by the re-interment of his body, (or bones,) and my mother’s also, a few years ago, into a vault which I purchased in St. Peter’s church-yard, and where your aunt Lloyd was placed.

“As the stone has been broken up I omit the inscription or epitaph.”

From the United States Gazette, Philadelphia, May 15th, 1809:

DIED—On Sunday, the 7th inst., Samuel Breck, Esq., aged 62 years.

This gentleman was born in Boston, where he resided until about fifteen years since, when he removed to this city. During the revolution he was the active and honest friend of his country, and as an agent for the French armies which were associated with us, his diligence, his attention, and his strict integrity enabled him to acquire considerable property, upon which he retired at the close of the war to enjoy the peaceful pleasure of social life.

When he became a citizen of Philadelphia, he brought with him a reputation which made every man his friend; which made him respected, esteemed and beloved. In the various walks of life who was his superior? As a public spirited citizen and friend to those who were struggling with commercial embarrassments, let his ceaseless and honorable exertions as a director of the Bank of the U. States be the proof. As a parent, as a husband, as a brother, and as a master, let those testify who were the objects of his unwearied affection and kindness. As a friend, let any one say that he was ever indisposed to active exertion. As the gentleman of the most correct deportment and the mildest manners, let every one speak of him with whom he ever conversed. As a model in the delightful recesses of social life, we appeal to those who have found him in the parlor amidst his family and friends.

We believe Mr. Breck died, as he had lived, without an enemy; for, what man could be at enmity with him, ‘with whom,’ to use the language of Johnson, ‘if he would quarrel, he would find the most difficulty how to abuse.’ It was his choice, indeed, to adorn the private circle, for if he had wished to step beyond it into scenes of more extended usefulness, honors awaited him; honors which neither talents nor wealth can attain if they are not found with the most incorruptible integrity. On the resignation of the late venerable and worthy president of the Bank of the U. States, Mr. Breck was pressed to occupy his station, and he was permitted to decline it only because those who wished it, feared that his health might be hazarded by the performance of its duties.

What can we add to increase the respect for his memory? They who knew him need not even this brief memorial, and if they who knew him not should even hear of him, they will wonder how, upon such a subject, we should be contented to dwell so briefly."

692. VI. HANNAH (BRECK) LLOYD.—The following obituary notice was printed by her brother, Samuel Breck, [940]:

DIED—On the 24th of July, 1846, in the 74th year of her age, Hannah Lloyd, relict of the late honorable James Lloyd. The numerous friends of that estimable lady have heard of her death with feelings of sadness and regret; for they all loved her, and she deserved their love. Her understanding was wise, discreet, religious, and well cultivated. With it, she kept in due subordination the promptings of a kind and liberal heart, prudent in small matters, yet munificent in great.

During the last fifteen years of her widowhood, she gave annually, for educational and other purposes of useful charity, more than one-third of her income. Her habitual frugality enabled her, without denying herself any of the comforts of her ample establishment, to afford that great outlay.

Although born and reared in affluence; although accompanied by prosperity from the cradle to the tomb, the purity of her character was never changed, nor her heart hardened to the woes of her fellow creatures.

Drawn by circumstances into gay and fashionable life, where she was admired, courted and caressed, she preserved her even and unassuming disposition, her kind, friendly, unwavering propriety of deportment. And this equanimity of mind was derived from religion, rather than from native temperament. Religion formed the basis of her system of conduct, secured her against the allurements of a flattering world, and gave a right direction to her feelings and actions, during the whole course of a long life. Yet, while she avoided, as much as her station in society would allow, the frivolities and dissipation of gay company, she entered with cordial good will into the rational enjoyment of the domestic and select social circle, where, surrounded by friendship and affection, she found herself in her appropriate place. These, and the associations of ladies who met to labor with their needles for the relief of the poor, constituted her chief delight and richest source of happiness.

This amiable and worthy woman met her last solemn change with calmness and piety, receiving the holy communion in her sick room with strong faith and humble hope. Having set her house in order, surrounded by her nearest and dearest friends and relatives, she left them, we have good reason to believe, to dwell forever in the pure and blissful region of her Savior and her God.

Her remains were deposited in the family vault, in the church-yard of St. Peter, in Philadelphia, to repose beside those of her parents, the late Samuel and Hannah Breck.

PHILADELPHIA, November, 1846.

697. VI. CHARLES BRECK.—The medallion miniature portrait from which this picture is copied, was in the possession of Charles du Pont Breck, Esq., [1950], of Scranton, Pa., who very politely allowed me to copy it for this work. The original is in a perfect state of preservation; it was done in colors with extreme delicacy of touch and finish, an admirable work of art. The cut was obtained too late to be inserted in its place in the genealogical text. While traveling in Italy Mr. Breck became engaged to be married to a very beautiful young lady of that country, and returned to his home to prepare his residence for her reception. After the completion of a very elaborate preparation, reproducing her own home at his, he returned to Italy only to find that she had been suddenly carried off by disease just before his arrival at her home.

CHARLES BRECK.

700. V. DANIEL BRECK, REV., OF HARTLAND, VT.—The following obituary notice is from the current press:

In August, 1845, died at his residence in Hartland, Vermont, the Rev. Daniel Breck, whose age lacked but three years of 100.

Mr. Breck was born in Boston, August 18th, 1748. He was religiously educated at Princeton, and graduated there in 1774, just as the revolutionary contest was about to commence, and being in sentiment heartily with his country, he entered the army as a chaplain, and in that capacity accompanied Colonel Porter's regiment into Canada. In that campaign, so full of incident, he partook, even to the gates of Quebec, of the great sufferings of the troops, sustaining life amid hunger, so fatal to many of the soldiers, by buckling a strap around him, which he tightened from day to day in order to regulate his appetite according to his allowance. His clerical duties, in the conflict of war, with the small-pox in camp, the wounded and dying both in battle and by starvation, were arduously and faithfully performed.

Having some interest in the military certificates, secured upon land in Ohio, he visited the Northwestern Territory, and preached the first sermon that was ever delivered in that region, on the spot where now stands Marietta, prophetically announcing in his text the certain spreading of our holy religion in the vast country just then opening itself to the Christian settler. He preached from Luke 1, 33, "And of His kingdom there shall be no end."

He was a man of strong nerve, morally and physically courageous, the friend of good order, virtue and religion, so that he ever, during his long life, won the entire confidence and esteem of all, whether in the sacred ministry, or as a public servant in his country's cause, or as a private citizen.

FIRST SERMON AT THE WEST.—The first sermon preached to the white people in the Northwestern Territory, was by Rev. Daniel Breck, on the 20th of July, 1788, in the block-house at Marietta. Now, (1852,) not less than 600 Presbyterians and Congregational ministers hold forth the word of life to 700 congregations in Ohio alone.

708. VI. ABIGAIL (BRECK) SPEAR, OF HARTLAND, VT.—The following obituary notice is from the current press:

Mrs. Abigail, wife of J. W. Spear, exchanged her home in Hartland, Vt., for the glorified home of the Christian, September 19th, 1872, aged 76 years.

Sister Spear was a daughter of the Rev. Daniel Breck, the first minister ever settled in the town of Hartland. She was converted some forty years ago, and connected herself with the M. E. Church in Hartland, of which she was a useful member. Her life was an example of piety. She was a kind and loving wife, and a magnanimous Christian, ever ready to deny herself for the good of others. We rarely meet with so consistent a Christian as was Sister Spear. After a severe and painful illness of nearly three weeks, she seemed almost impatient to depart and be with Jesus; and as she neared the other shore, she wished those standing by to give her love to all her friends and acquaintances, and to tell them that she loved Jesus, and that she wished them to meet her in Heaven. God has seen fit to call home one of his bright jewels. She died, as die the righteous, in great peace.

815. VIII. HARRIETTE M. BEEBE.—The following is from the current press of Springfield, Mass., in May, 1886, referring to a loan exhibition just concluded :

The two rooms in the "visitors' gallery" devoted to West Springfield are filled with valuable mementoes. Miss Harriet M. Beebe has contributed a candle stand, dated 1660, which belonged to Charles Chauncey, the second president of Harvard; a small book, dated 1694, with the signature of William P. Cowper, Esq., clerk of Parliament," and in the same hand, "En dono Montegu Bacon." The book is entitled, "Traite du Sublime ou du Merveilleux," and is printed in Greek and French on alternate pages. Very beautiful is the signature of John Hancock which adorns the commission of Samuel Mathews as justice of the peace for seven years. It is dated September 18th, 1780, and is also signed by John Avery, junior secretary, and makes the condition that Mr. Mathews shall behave himself throughout his term of office. Robert Breck, the minister of the town, also signs as a witness. He was the fourth pastor of the First Church in this city, and Miss Beebe, one of his descendants, has brought many memorials of him. Here is his boot-jack, 1736, and smoking tongs, 1784, a china cup and saucer belonging to his second wife, 1770, and an old cow-bell, 1764. An old book, 1685, belonging to his father, was given to Governor Bradstreet by King James II., and is entitled, "Copies of informations, etc., Relating to the Horrid Conspiracy Against the Late King." It is said formerly to have had the king's autograph on the fly leaf, which has been stolen. Several relics of the Count d'Estaing, the vessel which was lost in 1779, and recovered in 1859, find place in Miss Beebe's collection, and four silver spoons and a butter-knife which belonged to the Duke of Buckingham, and have his crest on the handles.

830. PATIENCE (DUNTON) BRECK.—The following is an extract from the current press of Boston :

ANOTHER LADY OF THE OLD SCHOOL.—In the state of Maine resides the venerable mother of our much esteemed citizen, Hon. Joseph Breck. She is in the 91st year of her age. From her early youth to the present time she has been remarkable for her industrious habits, her social and moral qualities, and for a refinement of taste, which developed itself in the love and cultivation of flowers. Perhaps there was no little school-girl in the village of Medfield, Mass., where she formerly resided, who had not received some choice flower or plant from her garden.

Within the last five years she has, without the aid of spectacles or patterns, embroidered many beautiful articles of worsted work, which she has distributed among her friends, who will long value them, not only as memorials of kind regard from their aged friend, but as elegant specimens of needlework. Her correspondents love to speak of her fair, legible penmanship, her promptness in replying to their letters, and her friends from

Massachusetts still visit her with increasing interest and pleasure. She has long lived in the constant expectation of being summoned away from earth, and the language of her heart has been, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

890. VI. JAMES BRECK, OF ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The following sketch is by a near kinsman:

The subject of this sketch was born at Boston, Mass., 1780, and died at Rochester, N. Y., in 1871, in the 92d year of his age. Boston was also the birthplace of his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather. Tracing his lineage back in a direct line to Edward Breck, who came from England and settled at Dorchester in 1635, he could well say that "the race comes from the true Puritanical New England blood."

While living on the farm, Mr. Breck enjoyed such educational advantages only as the common school in winter could afford. In 1804, he removed to Croydon, a few miles distant, and in the same state. Here he was engaged in successful mercantile pursuits till 1816, when he left for the adjoining town of Newport, where he remained in the same business twenty-four years, or until his removal to Rochester, N. Y., in 1840. During his residence in Newport, it is but just to say, that no one stood higher as a merchant and citizen, or was more conspicuous for enterprise and public spirit. For the last twenty years of his life at Rochester he lived in comparative retirement, but with the "latch-string" of hospitality always out, to welcome home children from different parts of the country and numerous relations by blood and marriage.

During his entire mercantile career of nearly half a century Mr. Breck never met with failure, and no note of his ever went to protest. His "bond" was always good, and his word equally so. Nor was his steady application to the work before him more conspicuous than was his unimpeachable veracity, his high sense of honor, his generous consideration for all in trouble or distress, and his unassailed integrity. His foresight and practical prudence in all the affairs of life were remarkable. He was a stranger to all forms of speculation, and followed the "straight and narrow way" of a safe, legitimate business, his reason being "to keep what you have, and to get what more you honestly can."

With a family of eleven children, he was generous and just to them all. In politics, he belonged in his younger days to the Federal party. During the existence of the Whig party he was its staunch and zealous supporter. Destitute of the arts of the mere politician, he was nevertheless very decided in his political opinions, and never hesitated to express them. He was called to many places of honor and trust both in Croydon and Newport, serving in the capacity of a selectman, and also as a representative in the legislature of the state a number of years from each of these towns.

In person he was tall, erect, large and fine looking, and his manners a type of the old school. In his habits he was regular and temperate in all things, save perhaps one—as a snuff-taker he had few equals and no superiors? He used the genuine "Maccaboy," and not to refer to the large red silk handkerchief which he always carried, and the "pinch" in his fingers, would be almost a fatal omission. Perhaps this habit was a family characteristic, as his brothers William and Henry indulged in the same, though to a far less degree, and yet, not one of his descendants has imitated his example. Among the gifts received at his golden wedding in 1861, was a pair of gold napkin rings from a son in California, and a gold snuff-box from a son in China, and while both parents could equally appropriate the value of the former, one alone could adequately estimate the worth of the latter.

Few of the name ever reached a more advanced age. He was ill but a few days, and retained his mental faculties to the last, expiring without a struggle, and leaving to his children what his own unstudied words, quoted in another place, so well express of his revered father before him, "that rich inheritance, an unspotted character, with a conscience unsullied, and resting in hope for another world."

940. VI. SAMUEL BRECK OF PHILADELPHIA.—The following is taken from a memoir, by J. Francis Fisher, President of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Instruction of the Blind, an office long filled by Mr. Breck:

Samuel Breck was born in Boston, Mass., 17th July, 1771. His father of the same name was a merchant of high standing and good fortune; his mother, Hannah Andrews, of a family which has proved its eminent social position to the present time.

* * * * *

He established himself for a short time in business in his native city, but when his father removed with all his family to Philadelphia, in August, 1792, he determined to accompany him. Although he never lost his interest in the home of his ancestors, and kept up, by visits and hospitalities a most cordial intercourse with his kinsfolk and friends, his affections were entirely transferred to the home of his adoption, and for the seventy years of his residence, Philadelphia had no more devoted or useful citizen—more zealous in her service, more jealous of her honor.

* * * * *

He resided six years in the city, engaged in mercantile pursuits, interrupted for a short season in 1794 by the insurrection in Western Pennsylvania, when he went as corporal in one of the companies of McPherson's Blues, on that bloodless expedition. He has left only one survivor of that honorable corps.

On Christmas eve of the year 1795 he married Miss Jean Ross, daughter of an eminent merchant of our city, with whom he lived for sixty-three years, years passed generally in great tranquility, though saddened by the loss of an only daughter, just as she had reached womanhood, with every attraction and accomplishment which parental affection could desire.

Soon after his marriage, he retired into the country, to a beautiful villa, which he had built on the banks of the Schuylkill, where he resided more than thirty years, devoted to agriculture and gardening, but at intervals cultivating the sciences and the arts of music and painting, for which a taste early inspired seems never to have worn out.

In his neighborhood he was constantly engaged in every good and charitable work, in all matters of public service and improvement, giving his time, his money, and his influence. Thus he took an active part in the erection of the two bridges over the Schuylkill, and in the establishment of the church at Mantua. He was a constant attendant at the meetings of the Agricultural Society, co-operating with his neighbor and friend, the learned and witty Judge Peters, of whom he wrote an interesting biographical notice, delivered before the Agricultural Society in 1828, which is in print. He was an ardent politician of the old Federal school, but always ready to do justice to his opponents, and ever discountenancing what he regarded as factious opposition. He was the author of many articles in the newspapers, and constantly attended the local political meetings before they became utterly perverted.

In 1817, he was elected to the State Senate of Pennsylvania, where he remained four years, during which time he devoted himself to the foundation of our system of internal improvements, preparing with great care a voluminous report, with maps. In this work he had the important co-operation of Dr. William Lehman, a member of the House, to whose exertions at that time, and subsequently, our commonwealth in great measure owed the successful completion of her canals. These merits were fully admitted in a memoir of Dr. Lehman read before the directors of the Athenæum, in 1847, by Mr. Breck.

* * * * *

It was, indeed, a happy time, marked by general good-fellowship among some of the most eminent men that our nation ever possessed. In these halcyon days our country was visited by its chivalrous friend and defender, Lafayette, and Mr. Breck had the happiness of joining in the act of justice and gratitude by which his great services were repaid, and afterwards extending his private hospitalities at his house on the Schuylkill to his father's friend and his own.

* * * * *

He was a director in several of our canal companies, and being appointed by the Governor of Pennsylvania, in 1837, on a commission to visit and report on the works of the upper division of the Lehigh, he performed the duties assigned him in the following summer.

He was one of the founders of the Philadelphia Savings Fund Society, and having been consulted as to its organization by his friend Mr. Conde Raguet, to whom he gives the credit of the first suggestion of this most valuable institution, was one of the original board of managers. He resigned in March, 1819, after assisting in carrying it through the first monetary panic, which, like many subsequent ones, only confirmed the wisdom and integrity of its management and the security of its depositors.

As a director of one of our banks, which afterwards was involved in difficulties from too great confidence in its cashier, he early perceived and protested against the dangers of its course, and resigned, and here, as in every other case, evinced his independence and his high sense of public and private honor.

* * * * *

He constantly presided at public meetings for objects which called forth the interest of our fellow-citizens in national affairs, and generally addressed them in speeches remarkable for brevity, sense and good taste. Amongst other such occasions may be mentioned the great dinner given to Daniel Webster by the merchants and citizens of Philadelphia in 1846.

The last occasion of the sort was on the 28th day of February, 1851, when he was in his 80th year. He then took the chair at a very large meeting of the Whig citizens, held in the upper saloon of the Chinese Museum, to express their approbation of the compromise measures passed at the last session of Congress, and to urge upon the Legislature of Pennsylvania the repeal of the obnoxious features of the Act of Assembly, passed March 3d, 1847, relative to fugitive slaves. His feeble voice was animated by the patriotism which he breathed in all he uttered; but, alas, like the warnings of those great statesmen, his juniors by many years, with whom he had been associated in Congress, but who preceded him to the tomb, it was lifted in vain.

As the most distinguished among the descendants of the Pilgrims resident in the city of Penn, he was elected president of the local society of the Sons of New England, and at its first annual celebration in December, 1844, delivered a very interesting discourse. He presided at several succeeding anniversaries, and added much to the pleasure of the meetings by the part he took in them.

As a member of the Historical Society, he was actively engaged in the successful effort, made in 1840, to renew the society, then threatened with extinction. He took an active part in their proceedings, and read at one of the meetings a memoir of Whitfield and his times. I must refer to the interesting memoir of Mr. Breck, recently read before the Historical Society by its distinguished president, the Hon. Joseph R. Ingersoll, for other particulars on this head, and I would acknowledge my indebtedness to that memoir for various facts only repeated here that they may not seem to have been overlooked in a sketch intended to be as brief as consistent with completeness.

He was elected in April, 1838, a member of the American Philosophical Society, and his general taste for scientific research gave him an interest in all its transactions. He read several papers at its meetings, especially one on "The Paper Currency of the Revolution," which was presented at the centennial celebration of that Society in 1843, and afterwards printed.

Though not one of the founders of the Philadelphia Athenæum, he was one of its largest benefactors. He presented to the library of that institution in 1829 a valuable collection of books to the number of nine hundred, afterwards increased at his death by the bequest of the largest part of his private library, thereby increasing the gift to upwards of two thousand volumes. He was elected president of the Athenæum in 1845, and was most punctual in his attendance at the meetings of the board till his failing health induced him to tender his resignation in 1855. This the directors induced him to withdraw, wishing to retain the honor of his name at the head of their board. About the same time, the directors, at their own expense, had placed in one of their halls a fine medallion bust in bronze of their president in a richly carved frame of oak, a silent compliment, which was most sensibly felt and courteously acknowledged. Besides the memoir of Dr. Lehman, read to the board, before referred to, Mr. Breck also delivered an address on laying a corner-stone of the new hall, on the 1st of November, 1845, which is in print.

Various other literary institutions were the objects of his interest and liberality. In March, 1843, he made a present to the Mercantile Library of ninety-two volumes. To the library of the American Philosophical Society he gave forty bound volumes of valuable pamphlets, and to the Philadelphia Library he presented a large collection of autograph letters from distinguished revolutionary characters and foreigners, which he had selected from the papers of his own father, Mr. Ross, his father-in-law, and his own correspondence.

He was a sincere and ardent member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He was one of the founders of St. Luke's Church, a vestryman, and a devoted friend of its various pastors. He represented this church, and the little chapel at Mantua, in several conventions, and was always ready to give to the various societies and charities connected with the church both time and money, of which, with a very limited income, he seemed always to have enough for every good object.

In his private life, we may find an equally good example. Kind, cheerful, friendly, hospitable, he was always surrounded by friends and his numerous relations, to whom he endeared himself by every affectionate attention, never forgetting those little tokens of kind remembrance which are more acceptable than expensive gifts. At his death, many of his friends were astonished at the moderate estate to be divided among his kinsfolk and various charitable objects, but it was found he had turned almost all his estate into annuities, that he might distribute it during his life, and share the happiness of others in his own beneficence.

Full of sympathy for all, he seemed to be the intimate friend of all good men, and when honors were to be paid to the living or the dead, he was generally selected as the representative of his fellow-citizens in their demonstrations of respect or grief.

Interested in all public matters, warm in his political opinions, but always insisting on an honorable course, and always liberal and just to his opponents, he may be said never to have made an enemy, and never to have lost a friend.

With a taste for music and the fine arts not too fastidious to find pleasure in moderate merit, he practiced music and painting, even in old age, to his own satisfaction, and was a kindly critic at every exhibition. He was a constant reader, and secured his acquisition by notes which form a large part of his diaries. He made some progress in the natural sciences, especially mineralogy, in which department he amassed a considerable collection of specimens, afterwards presented to Burlington College. He had a great facility in versifying, which was turned to account in many a pretty compliment to his female friends, and we have still preserved several neat translations by him from the best French poets. At one time he was a frequent contributor to our journals and magazines, especially the Portfolio, when edited by the accomplished Denny.

Thus, in his protracted and childless old age, he was not desolate, for he found in his elegant tastes, as well as his benevolent pursuits, the most cheering occupation. From gloomy misanthropy, indeed, his religion would have secured him, for he was a most sincere and humble Christian, of which we have evidence in his diaries, where every opening year and every anniversary of his birth and marriage was an occasion to record his grateful thanks for the mercies of Heaven, and on every recurrence of the Lord's day, we find that the services of the church were only a small part of his devotional occupations, and the words of Scripture and the teachings of the preacher were never dismissed without solemn meditation and often extended comment.

* * * * *

At the annual meeting of the contributors to the Pennsylvania Institution for the Instruction of the Blind, in March, 1843, he was elected one of the vice-presidents, and on the 4th of March, 1850, he was called upon to fill the place of president, vacated by the resignation of Mr. Richards, which he occupied till the time of his death.

And never did a board possess a presiding officer, or an institution of instruction a head better fitted by character, temper and manners to perform all his duties. And to himself it was a constant source of happiness and pride, calling forth all the kindest sentiments of his nature, gratifying his heart by its results, occupying, without fatiguing, his mind. Denied the happiness of paternal affections, these helpless yet cheerful children elicited all the tenderness of his nature. He was delighted to call them his blind children, and he remarked to the principal that he enjoyed more happiness since he was seventy years old than at any part of his previous life. I quote from a note of Mr. Chapin's to myself: "Mr. Breck's personal interest in the happiness of the pupils was remarkable. No one ever made a request that he did not attend to, or bring a grievance that he did not remove if possible. He gave time and attention promptly to such cases. His love for the pupils thus constantly manifested, attached them to him as a father.

* * * * *

"Soon after the attack on Fort Sumter, he was at a concert of the pupils of the institution, and occupied a seat on the platform. He here availed himself of an opportunity, as he had done on former occasions, to manifest his deep interest in the events that have been crowded into the months elapsed since the opening of the Southern Rebellion. At the close of the concert, a call was made for the "Star Spangled Banner, and it was sung with great spirit. At the last chorus Mr. Breck sprang up in view of the audience, and waving his hat over his head, called for three cheers for 'the Union and the Constitution, one and indivisible!' adding, 'I was a man when they were formed, and God forbid that I should live to witness their downfall!'"

Mr. Breck was not a person of extraordinary talents, of profound acquirements, of restless energy or lofty ambition, but he has shown that these are not needed to fulfil the duties of a citizen in their highest acceptation. He was born and bred at a happy period for the development of the noblest traits of character. He had around him in intimate association, the highest examples of virtue and patriotism. He had received that superior education which prepared him for better occupations than those which lead to wealth, and inspired those fine qualities and elegant tastes which may, perhaps, be most successfully cultivated by the possessor of modest means. He had a heart which taught him, to diffuse happiness around him, was the surest way to enjoy it himself, and that this could be best done by a multitude of kind offices to his friends and dependents. He placed the good of others as his constant aim, and there were few who more entirely succeeded in gaining the love and respect of all his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Breck is often cited as a gentleman of the old school, but he had none of the pedantic pomposity, the usual type of that class, so often mistaken for dignity. He was not given to flourishing salutations or studied compliments. Neither was his courteousness like that said to be inspired by kissing a celebrated stone in the Emerald Isle, nor yet akin to the cajolery of Autolycus, or of the Yankee clock-maker, who has given an American name to interested flattery. He had been educated in France, but was not an adept in the commerce of compliment, the glistening froth which feeds social vanity for a moment, but is as unsubstantial as the breath on which it floats. His was the real courtesy of a benevolent heart, distinguished by urbanity in conversation. Not to speak of the kind attention called forth in sickness or distress, he seemed to know by instinct when a token of remembrance would be most gratifying. Had he listened to or read a literary production, he hastened to write or tell the author how much pleasure it had given him. Was a friend about to leave the country, he carried with him a letter expressive of kind wishes, and received his congratulations on his return. If a visit which he thought due was prevented, a note with compliments and excuses was sure to represent him; and I presume there is hardly one among his acquaintances who has not in his portfolio some such memento. Among his survivors there are still those who miss the customary token of remembrance on occasion of a birthday, which he never forgot, or dear old merry Christmas, when a flower, a little drawing, or some verses from his hand, would give the most gratifying proof of friendship. And thus it was to the end.

The following is taken from a letter of Hon. Samuel Breck, of Philadelphia, to Edward Cruft, [167], of Boston, under date of 17th Dec., 1847:

"I was educated in France at the Royal and Military College of Loureze, in the province of Languedoc. I spent more than four years there, and returned to the United States in 1787, in company with the celebrated Paul Jones, and landed in New York the June of that year. That great city was then a village, with eight or ten sea vessels only in the harbor, the wharves in a state of ruin, and the lower part of Broadway, from Trinity Church (church included) to the Battery was in the same situation in which a great conflagration had placed it six years before, when the city was held by the British. The city at that date extended no further than St. Paul's Church, and contained only twenty thousand inhabitants, without commerce or capital. On reaching Boston early in July, 1787, I found the town in a most languid state as to trade, all the southern part in ashes owing to a large fire among the wooden houses, of which the town was then chiefly built. It was to relieve the sufferers that Lafayette gave, through the agency of my father, three hundred guineas. I deposited Lafayette's letter to him, on that occasion, very lately in the Philadelphia Library. In 1792, my father was driven, as it were, by most heavy and unequal taxation, and settled in Philadelphia. I followed him. I have partaken here pretty largely of the favor of the people, having represented them two years in Congress, six in the state senate, and two in the city councils. * * * I had only one child, a daughter, who died at 21 years of age. She was handsome, graceful and accomplished. I am now living with the wife of my youth, whom I married fifty-two years ago the 24th of this month. She, as well as the writer, is in good health."

The following is taken from a letter of Hon. Samuel Breck, of Philadelphia, to Samuel Breck, [1650], of Bridgewater, under date of 1st March, 1851:

"During the siege of Boston by Washington, in 1775, my father came with his family temporarily to Philadelphia, and on our return spent the winter at Taunton, where I saw the celebration on the 5th of November of the burning of the pope and the devil, as was usual in N. England at the anniversary of the gunpowder-plot. I was then between 4 and 5 years old, and remember distinctly the topography of the green, and the car in which was seated his holiness, with satan at his feet."

958. VIII. LLOYD ASPINWALL.—The following is collected from the current press:

Gen. Lloyd Aspinwall, of this city, who has been in Bristol, R. I., with his family, in apparent good health, was stricken with apoplexy at 8 o'clock on the morning of September 4th, 1886, and died at noon.

He was born in this city fifty-six years ago, his father being William H. Aspinwall, a member of the famous firm of Howland, Aspinwall & Co. He was educated in this city, and entered his father's office, of which at a very early age, he assumed the management.

Gen. Aspinwall succeeded his father in the firm of Howland & Aspinwall, who were the pioneers in quick transportation across Panama. The town of Aspinwall, on the isthmus, derived its name from the original firm. At the time the firm was in full glory, during the years of California excitement, Gen. Aspinwall was a boy. He reached manhood with the example of his elders to guide him, and entered business full of enthusiasm and business energy. He had only fairly started upon a business career when the war began. Before that he had trained for eight years with the state troops, rising from the ranks to the staff in the Fourth Artillery. He responded at once to the call for troops in 1861, and was active in the organization of the Twenty-second Regiment. His service in the field began as Lieutenant-Colonel of that regiment. He commanded it during its term of enlistment. Afterwards he had a varied service. He had charge of the purchase and equipment of vessels that composed the expedition to New-Berne, and was president of a board of officers to revise army regulations. He was aide to Gen. Burnside at the battle before Fredericksburg, and was dispatched to give to President Lincoln the first report of that great engagement.

After the war he returned to business, but could not divest himself of military associations. He was elected Brigadier-General of the Fourth Brigade of the National Guard, and, as senior officer, had command of the First Division. At the same time he was President of the State Military Association, and was active in establishing the rifle ranges, which have since been incorporated into the military system. He was one of the founders of the Army and Navy Club, and became its president in 1877. In 1880 Gov. Cornell appointed him engineer-in-chief on his military staff, a position that he held through Gov. Cornell's incumbency. Since then Gen. Aspinwall, while still retaining his genial manners and the warm attachment of the National Guard and a wide circle of friends, has slowly been withdrawing into his business and has led a quiet life. He was a staunch Republican, but rarely active in politics. Some of his friends in 1880 urged him to become a candidate for mayor of the city. He considered the matter, but decided not to seek the nomination.

His son, Major Lloyd Aspinwall, was inspector of rifle practice on the staff of Gen. W. G. Ward, First Brigade, at the time of its recent reorganization.

Gen. Aspinwall was Vice-Commander of George Washington Post, No. 103, G. A. R., and was a member of the Union League, Union and Century clubs.

He married Miss DeWolfe, of Bristol, and was at the house of her brother, Mr. B. DeWolfe, when he died.

Gen. McMahon, President of the Society of the Army of the Potomac and Commander of George Washington Post, and a detail of four comrades of Babbit Post, of Bristol, accompanied the body to New York. The funeral was held from St. Mark's Church, New York.

998. JOHN LLOYD ASPINWALL.—The following is taken from the volume entitled, "Religion in Action";

From a sermon preached in Grace Church, New York, May 18th, 1873, by Rev. Henry C. Potter, D.D., Rector:

"Mr. John L. Aspinwall was one who, through wealth and social position and rare personal endowments combined to tempt him to a selfish life, or a pleasure-seeking one, was at once unselfish and unspoiled. Living from deliberate choice, a life of most unobtrusive retirement, he yet made his home the center of kindly and beneficent influences which radiated far and wide. The treasurer of a young and struggling college, his hospitable roof never ceases to welcome its undergraduates, and his generous hand to sustain and befriend them. There is more than one clergyman of the church who owes his literary and theological education largely, if not entirely to Mr. Aspinwall's generous bounty, a bounty which was nevertheless so delicately and unobtrusively dispensed, that it never once advertised the giver, nor shamed or humbled the recipient. The faculty of that struggling college, who followed him the other day to and fro through yonder aisle, and its alumni as well, could reveal a record of good deeds as untiring as they were benignant. Nay, not only they, but others in humbler walks, the very poor and solitary and unbefriended throughout the whole neighborhood, which was made better by his living in it, bear witness to-day to the beneficence of one who literally "cared for" (as the Greek runs) the widow and the orphan.

"There are some men whose generous impulses are only indulged in posthumous bequests; who, in other words, finding it easier to contemplate the surrender of their substance to the cause of charity or the service of Christ, when they themselves can no longer control it in any sense, undertake to compensate for a lifetime of stinted bounty by post-mortem liberality in their wills. But Mr. Aspinwall had long recognized the truth of Sir Isaac Newton's declaration that 'what a man gives away after death is no longer his to give away,' and so laid the foundations of lasting charity in his own household by being his own charitable executor, and inculcating both by precept and example, the authority of the Scriptural precept to do good unto all men 'while we have the opportunity.'

"And all this kindliness of nature and wisdom of philanthropic activity was crowned by a stainless purity and integrity, on which 'suspicion's self could never cast a doubt.' Some one once, speaking to me of Mr. Aspinwall, said, 'our friend is a man pre-eminently qualified to enjoy life.' I think he did enjoy it; but he enjoyed it by keeping himself pure from the grasp of its greed, and clean from the taint of its vices. Of a singularly sweet and sunny temperament, combining the rarest charm, the breadth and force of manhood with the freshness and playfulness of youth, he attracted men of all views, and enjoyed in a singular measure the friendship, and still more, the respect, of those who, while they did not themselves occupy a Christian discipleship, yet honored him for the openness and consistency which adorned that discipleship in him. He was conspicuously one who had learned how to live in the world, and yet to keep himself unspotted from it.

"I have never been in any doubt as to the secret of that achievement. Mr. Aspinwall was a man of simple, direct, unshaken Christian faith. He had gone to the Master as his personal Savior, and he loved Him with a child-like simplicity and a manly loyalty. He was not ashamed of his religion. He spoke of it and wrote about it (as more than one of them within the sound of my voice can testify) to his personal friends. And so his Master was not ashamed of him. He made his life to be a living epistle, and the gentle beauty of its decline to be like the luminous radiance of some golden sunset."

From addresses at the commencement at St. Stephen's College (Episcopal), Annandale, Dutchess County, N. Y., June, 1873:

Mr. John V. L. Pruyn, president of the trustees, said:

"From the first movement to give form and life to the college, until his death, he was its warm and earnest friend. He not only gave the institution the benefit of his counsels and his time, but he was its constant, its liberal benefactor. For several years he acted as its treasurer, an office which at times involved much care and attention to detail, and the requisitions on which, he uniformly met, liberally advancing from his own means for the not infrequent deficiencies in the college exchequer. The warden and faculty must, I am sure, feel how often his liberality relieved their anxieties. His generous hospitality to the trustees, to the officers, and to all connected with the college, is known to all who are acquainted with its history, and the very ample arrangements of his liberally appointed home were often shared by many whom he only knew as friends of St. Stephen's.

"It does not become me, even did time allow it, to speak of Mr. Aspinwall in his other relations in life. That has already been well and fittingly done by another. Only a word to testify to the attractive and generous traits of his character, to his constant ministrations to the poor, to his conservative Protestant Churchmanship, and his devotion to duty in whatever work Providence placed before him. My acquaintance with him commenced with the history of the college, and was thoroughly cordial, I hope I may say, on both sides. When I had known him for a year or two, I felt as though he had been my friend from boyhood. He carried the brightness and the elasticity of youth into maturer years to an extent rarely met with. The regularity of his life, the equanimity of his temper, his systematic habits of out-door exercise, and the strength of his constitution, gave promise of many more years of vigorous and useful manhood. But all availed nothing. He was called to his home. It may well be said of our departed friend, that amid all the cares and responsibilities by which he was surrounded, he was at all times the Christian gentleman, and that by his life and his faith he was prepared for his latter end. Let us all thank God for his good example, and pray Heaven to raise up many friends for this college such as he was."

The Bishop of New York said:

* * * * *

"But, friends and brethren it was necessary to know him intimately to know all his worth, and all the charm of his life and character. Under an exterior that was singularly bright and manly, there was a warmth of religious feeling found in union with tender human sympathies which won upon the hearts of all who came near enough to see him as he was. Very many years ago he passed the winter in the south of France. In the same town there chanced to be a young parishoner of mine whose life was slowly wearing away from a depressing and hopeless malady. In a strange country, it was a sad condition to be in, even though cheered, as he was, with the presence of a tender and devoted wife. Mr. Aspinwall heard of him, and called to see him; and then ensued a series of visits and ministrations, so full of love and consolation, that the sick man came to long for his daily return, and showed by many expressions and many tokens that those loving words, those prayers and readings of Holy Scripture, had not been brought to him in vain. From one instance learn the sweetness and elevation of his character."

1020. VI. DANIEL BRECK, OF RICHMOND, KENTUCKY.—The following is taken from "Collins' History of Kentucky":

Judge Daniel Breck was born in Topsfield, Mass., February 12th, 1788, and died at Richmond, Ky., February 4th, 1871, aged 83. His father, Rev.

Daniel Breck, was a chaplain in the War of the Revolution, and as such was with Montgomery and Arnold in the assault upon Quebec, and wintered with the army in Canada; was afterwards pastor first in Massachusetts, then in Vermont, and lived to be nearly 100 years of age. The son, after many struggles in obtaining an education, alternately teaching and attending school, graduated in 1812 at Dartmouth College, and out of a large and brilliant class was selected to deliver the philosophical oration. He came to Richmond, Ky., December, 1814, and began the practice of law, rapidly achieving success and fame as one of the ablest lawyers in the state; was chosen a representative in the Kentucky Legislature in 1824, '25, '26, '27 and '34, during which he originated the system of internal improvements, the Northern Bank, and other important measures; was appointed to the court of appeals bench, April 7th, 1843, retiring in 1849 to run for Congress, where he served two years, 1849-51, the intimate friend and counselor there, in the memorable struggle over the Compromise Measures, and through life, of Henry Clay and John J. Crittenden, and enjoying also the confidence and highest regard of Daniel Webster. He is pronounced by the profession one of the profoundest and most learned of the court of appeals bench. His death was noticed in a special message to the legislature, of marked appropriateness and discrimination, by Gov. Stevenson,—his last act before retiring from the gubernatorial chair,—and in eloquent addresses in the Kentucky senate and house of representatives. In private life he was eminently active and useful. He was exempted from the infirmities of age. His history at length would be a history of Madison County, from his intimate connection with its courts, its schools, its banks, its roads, its politics, and every other interest. He had singular self-reliance, balance, evenness of temper, and tenacity of purpose. In learning and mental discipline he was equaled by few of the public men of his day; in great practical wisdom and almost unerring judgment, surpassed by none. He was a firm believer in the Christian religion, and died established in its hopes. He was married in 1819 to Miss Jane B. Todd, a daughter of Gen. Levi Todd, of Fayette County, one of the early pioneers of Kentucky, and one of the founders of Lexington in 1779.

The following is taken from "Allen's History of Kentucky":

DANIEL BRECK.—The first public position ever held by him in this state was that of judge of a county court. In 1824 he was elected to the state legislature, and served in that body five years by re-election. From 1835 to 1843 he was president of the Richmond Branch of the Bank of Kentucky. In 1840 he was a presidential elector, and in 1843 was appointed judge of the court of appeals. He was a representative in Congress from 1849 to 1851, and was on the committee of manufacture. The degree of L.L.D. was conferred on him by the Transylvania University in 1843. He attained the title of colonel in the militia service. After the expiration of his term in Congress he resumed the office of president of the Richmond Bank.

The following is from the current press :

DEATH OF A PROMINENT KENTUCKIAN.—The death of Judge Daniel Breck, of Richmond, Ky., has been the occasion of a special message from the governor to the legislature of that state; a tribute to departed worth the more impressive that it is paid to a political opponent. We copy the message referred to below, as Judge Breck is widely known in this state, where his sons have held, or now hold, prominent positions of public trust :

“Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:—

“The last act of my administration is saddened by the unwelcome news which it officially communicates to the general assembly, that another old and honored citizen of this commonwealth has passed away; Judge Daniel Breck is no more. He died at his residence in Richmond, on the 4th inst., at a quarter past 8 o'clock, full of years and full of honor. He died with the simplicity in which he had lived, his strong intellect undimmed by the snows of more than four-score winters.

“Judge Breck has, for the last half century, played too conspicuous a part in the history of Kentucky to require a word of commendation from me. His life, character and public service are his highest eulogium. Born in the state of Massachusetts, he came as a youthful adventurer to Kentucky fifty-seven years ago, and soon thereafter settled in the county of Madison, where he has ever since lived, and where he now sleeps. He was the architect of his fortune and his fame. On coming to the bar he soon acquired distinction, and practiced his profession with profit and success. As a member of the general assembly, as a judge of the appellate court, and as a representative in the Congress of the United States, Daniel Breck guarded with fearless and inflexible integrity the honor and interests of Kentucky.

“Judge Breck was eminently a practical man. He overvalued nothing that was common, and undervalued nothing that was useful. He was a man of strong will, fixed and determined in his convictions, warm in his affections, but consistent and unyielding in his political affinities. He was a zealous partisan, but a fearless, honest patriot, enjoying to the highest degree, the confidence of his friends, and commanding at all times the respect of his opponents. His usefulness and success rested on the basis of a self-reliance which all who knew him appreciated and admired. Few men have been more useful or enjoyed to a larger degree the confidence of the people among whom he lived than Judge Breck. Born in the last century, he is another of our pure, patriotic and able men so rapidly passing away, and of whom so few now remain to their country. It is a privilege to honor their memories. To perpetuate their virtues, their wisdom, their patriotism, their public services, not as testimonials to the dead, but as examples to the living.

“J. W. STEVENSON.”

18th March, 1871, the Legislature of Kentucky adopted resolutions in memory of Judge Daniel Breck, deceased.

1020. JANE BRIGGS (TODD) BRECK.—The following is from the current press :

The announcement has been made in the obituary column of this paper of the death of Mrs. Jane B. Breck in Richmond, Kentucky, on the morning of May 30th. There wants not friends ready with offerings, but we who best knew her worth claim the privilege of making it the memorial it deserves.

Precious to us are the testimonies of the numbers who with "her children arise up and call her blessed," but none are as prepared to estimate her character as we who saw it from within that circle made happy by her presence and her love.

This beloved mother was born June 3d, 1795, and wanted, therefore, but four days to the completion of her 60th year. She was the daughter of Gen. Levi Todd, one of the most distinguished of the early settlers of Kentucky, and sister of Robert S. Todd and James C. Todd, deceased, of Lexington, of North Todd, deceased, Hon. David Todd and Samuel B. Todd of Missouri, and Dr. John Todd of Illinois. Of five sisters, three survive, her own departure completing the equal division of their large family.

At the early age of four years she lost her mother, and seven years later was left to complete orphanage by the death of her father. In 1819 she was married to her now afflicted husband, who after a union of nearly thirty-seven years is left to mourn the loss of her sympathies and counsels. A few years later, upon the organization of a Presbyterian Church in Richmond, she became one of its members, and as long as her health continued, was most exemplary in her attendance upon all its services and in her active devotion to works of benevolence. In her religious life she exhibited her characteristic earnestness. Strong and clear in her convictions, firm and energetic, she was not turned aside by obstacles from the path of duty when once defined in her mind.

She was an intelligent Christian, ardently attached to the fundamental truths of Christianity, judging herself severely, and entertaining hopes with caution, but resting with implicit faith upon the Atonement of our Divine Savior.

In her social relations she was just, sincere and kind, in her friendships ardent and devoted, cleaving to those who loved her with a tenacity which no dangers or changes of fortune could affect. To the poor and the unfortunate she was always a friend. Her kindness and charities were dispensed without ostentation, and will be known only when those who have ministered to the disciples for the Master's sake shall receive their judgment and reward.

In her family she was best known and most loved, its light and its center. To her husband she was a valued counsellor and a constant support, sharing with him all his trials, her heart beating in tenderest sympathy for him in their common bereavement sorrows. To her children—and with difficulty we trust ourself to speak of her in this relation—to them she was everything. She loved them with an unfailing, unvarying devotion. In their infancy and youth she was scrupulously faithful in teaching them the ways of truth, and honor, and religion. Firm in her requisitions of duty, she withheld no gratification consistent with their good. She taught them to pray, and often prayed with them alone. Memory, as now we write, makes its way back, through crowding and jostling events that press about it for notice, to those blissful days, the dear old home, and the hallowed chamber, where with the key turned upon herself, and as she poured out her earnest prayers for blessings upon our young life. And to the last her strength and energies were exerted in efforts for the happiness of her children. For several years preceding her departure she labored under complicated disease of the heart and lungs, and convinced that that event would be sudden, she lived in constant expectation and readiness, as the passenger by the wayside awaiting the coach to come and take him on his journey. She waited for no parting hour; her counsels were all delivered, and her memorials to her children all distributed. And when at last she fell gently to sleep, and none knew the moment of departure, it was felt that her life and testimony were as complete as though friends had been permitted to gather around and listen to words spoken while death was implanting his solemn seal.

She is gone from us, but her memory is embalmed with love and enshrined in our hearts; and we will follow her to her blessed abode; "There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest." R. L. B.

1035. WILLIAM C. McDOWELL.—The following is taken from an obituary pamphlet published at Hillsborough, Ohio, 1867:

The telegraph brings us intelligence that the Hon. W. C. McDowell, of Leavenworth, met his death in St. Louis, on the evening of July 16th.

* * * * *

He emigrated to Kansas at an early day, where his eminent legal abilities immediately gave him a prominent position in the affairs of the territory. As a member of the Constitutional Convention upon the admission of Kansas as a state, and as judge of the district court, he acquitted himself with more than credit, and retired from the latter position after serving a full term, refusing a re-election, to the regret of the whole bar and legal fraternity of Kansas.

Just in the prime of life possessing the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens, his adopted state can ill afford to lose him. His demise not only casts a gloom over his own household, but many friends all over the West, together with the companions of his youth and maturer years in Ohio, mourn with sincere regret his untimely death.

At a meeting of the Wyandotte bar, held in the city of Wyandotte, the following resolutions were adopted:

1. That in the untimely death of Hon. W. C. McDowell, late Judge of the First Judicial District of Kansas, the bar has lost one of its most illustrious citizens, and society one of its most genial members.

2. That the death of Judge McDowell is deeply and painfully felt by the bar of this county. As a judge, he was impartial and honorable; as an associate, kind, gentle and social; as an attorney, faithful—blending in one harmonious whole, the just judge, the true gentleman, and the honest lawyer.

The following is taken from the Leavenworth, Kansas, current press:

It is our painful duty to announce the sudden and unexpected death of Judge Wm. C. McDowell, of Leavenworth, Kansas, son of our townsman Gen. J. J. McDowell, and a native of this place. His death was occasioned by falling from the top of an omnibus, in St. Louis, on Tuesday of last week. A sudden lurch of the omnibus on the rough pavement of the street caused him to lose his balance and fall directly in front of the wheels, which passed over him, crushing his chest, and producing fatal injuries. He survived the terrible accident only a few minutes, and spoke but once before death released him from his sufferings.

Judge McDowell was a gentleman of fine mental endowments, and of a genial and social disposition, which made him a favorite with all who knew him. He was admitted to the bar of this county when quite young, afterwards practiced in Cincinnati, and finally removed to Kansas, where he rapidly rose in his profession, and was elected district judge, which office he held for several years. After retiring from that position he resumed practice and was fast acquiring a competence, when, in the prime of life and usefulness, he was so suddenly called from earth. He was a little over 39 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband and father.

His remains were brought to this place last Saturday evening, and on Sunday were interred in the new cemetery. The funeral services were held in the Presbyterian Church, from which, after an impressive and feeling discourse by Rev. Dr. Steele, a long train of afflicted relatives and sympathizing friends of the deceased followed his body to its last resting place.

It is no doubt a source of inexpressible comfort to the bereaved and sorrowing family to feel that though he for whom they mourn was called to die so unexpectedly and with so little time for preparation, yet they have a good reason to believe that he was ready for the great change from time to eternity. A few months ago, he made a public confession of religion and united himself with the Presbyterian Church in Leavenworth, of which he continued an active and consistent member. May his example teach us to be also ready, for "in such an hour as ye know not, the Son of Man cometh."

1050. VI. SAMUEL BRECK, M. D.—The following is from the current press of Huntsville, Alabama :

The many friends of Dr. Samuel Breck in this city and county will regret to learn that he died at Canton, Miss., on the 30th of May last. He was a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this city for a number of years, and a member of the vestry, and a resident of this county for more than the third of a century, and was held in high respect for his professional character, social virtue and Christian integrity. The following tributes to him from friends in his new home in Canton, Miss., will be appreciated by his old friends here :

"Dr. Samuel Breck, who has been a resident of Canton since the war, died suddenly of paralysis at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. E. A. Ford. Dr. Breck, as a physician, had, in his earlier and more active life, taken a high stand, and was an honor and an ornament to the profession. He was an aged gentleman, ripe in years and in honors. Having finished the work of a long and useful life, he has 'crossed over the river to rest.'"

DR. SAMUEL BREECK, OF ALABAMA.

The accompanying picture is taken from a portrait painted when Dr. Breck was in middle age, and now in possession of his daughter.

At a meeting of the physicians of Canton and vicinity, on the 31st of May, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted :

WHEREAS, The all-wise God, in the dispensation of His providence has been pleased to remove from our midst our venerable friend and brother, Dr. Samuel Breck, and

WHEREAS, Whilst on the theatre of active life, Dr. Breck was an ornament alike to his profession and to society ; and when disqualified by the infirmities of age for the activities of his profession, he still continued, by social virtues, to adorn the circle in which he moved,

Resolved, That the members of the profession tender the family their heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be furnished the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That a copy of the above proceedings be published in the city papers.

WM. C. REID, Chairman.

1051. VII. PERCY BRECK.—The following are collected from the current press :

DIED—In St. Louis, Mo., of Asiatic cholera, on the 4th inst., Percy Breck, in the 20th year of his age.

The tenderest sympathies of the associates and late fellow-students of Percy Breck go out to his fond father and mother and loving sister, and their grief over his untimely taking away is shared by a wide circle of devoted friends. A short time ago he left home for St. Louis, to engage in business, entering a mercantile house in that city. His starting out for himself was full of promise, and he seemed well equipped for the battle of life. But four weeks after he arrived in St. Louis he was attacked by the epidemic which has laid so many low, and the end soon came. A eulogy from one even who has been his intimate associate in childhood, in boyhood, and in his student life, seems but faintly to express the esteem in which he was held. One found much in his character to admire and nothing to censure. His diligent application as a student, his close attention to every duty, his vigorous grasp of the subjects to which his attention was directed, and the unusually wide range of knowledge to which he attained were characteristics.

By his sprightliness and his strict decorum, both in language and deportment, he gained the admiration of his fellow-students and the esteem of his instructor. No youth was ever reared in a community more generally beloved than was he, and when he departed for St. Louis, it is believed he left not an enemy behind, but carried with him the warmest and best wishes of all who knew him. It is a consolation that the prayers of a Christian mother attended him from the cradle to the grave. His virtues are engraved on the tablets of many hearts, and his memory is embalmed in their affections.

"Light may the green sod rest upon his bosom."

A few short weeks ago Percy Breck left the home of his childhood to seek his fortune in a distant city. Strong in health, a pure manhood, and the sympathy and support of loving relatives and warm friends, the bright prospects of a successful career and useful life were cut off suddenly and with a shock that falls heavily upon all whose ties with him it severs. He had a mind ennobled by nature and refined by culture; he could exercise a profound intensity of thought, uncommon with persons of his age; he possessed a remarkably retentive memory; he had acquired an extensive learning, and gained a respectable familiarity with French, Spanish and German. The pure life which he led was marked by the influences of the Bible, illustrated and impressed on his mind from childhood by a devoted Christian mother. Kind, gentle and obliging in his disposition, courteous in manners, temperate and chaste in habits, even of temper, and handsome in person, he was a gentleman whom to know made one better.

1290. VII. JOSEPH BRECK, OF BOSTON.—The following obituary notices are from the current press:

A MISSIONARY OF THE BEAUTIFUL.—The death of Hon. Joseph Breck will awaken many soothing reminiscences in the minds of those, scattered all over the country, who have been indebted to his teachings and his services in the cultivation of flowers. No man has done so much as he did towards clothing our sterile New England soil with the growth of the beautiful, or our stern New England natures with the appreciation and love of the same. His "Book of Flowers" was one of the earliest and most complete of the manuals adapted to our climate, and it went through we know not how many editions, its popularity, in fact, having continued unabated to the present time. That a man of such physical and mental energy, capable of battling his way in the roughest fields of life, should have devoted, as we may say, consecrated, himself to the gentle ministry of the beautiful in nature, affords a proof of that original endowment which we call genius in the poet and the artist. In Mr. Breck it was allied with the most sterling qualities of character, so that the man outshone the horticulturist. He had the reward of a well spent life in a serene old age, preserving his faculties to the last, and showing as fine a specimen of patriarchal bearing and manners as is often seen in our streets. Many a man who has made a noise in the world has left less behind him to keep his memory fragrant and to perpetuate his beneficent influence than Joseph Breck.

BRIGHTON.—Hon. Joseph Breck, the veteran horticulturist, died on Saturday, at the age of 78 years, 11 months and 14 days. He was widely known as a seed raiser, and the senior member of the firm of Joseph Breck & Sons, of Boston. The deceased had served in the state senate and various other public capacities. He was an ex-president of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, and for many years a useful and honored member of that organization. He was a gentleman of the old school in the best sense of the term.

1330. VI. CHARLES BRECK, OF MILTON, MASS.—The following is from the current press of 12th January, 1888:

Probably no face is better known in all parts of Norfolk County than that of "Honest" Charles Breck, of Milton. Mr. Breck was born in Quincy, Mass., January 11th, 1798, and therefore was 90 years old yesterday. He has always been very healthy, and can any day be seen riding about Milton or walking about the streets near home, and does considerable light work for exercise. Mr. Breck by occupation is a surveyor, but has done but little of that work for several years past.

He is probably the oldest Mason in Massachusetts, and perhaps in New England, and is a member of Rural Lodge, of Quincy. He is also an Odd Fellow of long standing.

For more than a generation he has been town treasurer of Milton, and for about the same time he has been parish clerk of the First Church of that town. He takes great pride in pointing to his long record, and to the fact that he has never been short a cent, and has always served without bonds.

The following is from the Milton News, of January 14th, 1888:

One of the events looked forward to with interest by the Free Masons of this vicinity was the 90th birthday of their greatly beloved and highly respected brother, Past Master Charles Breck. This was reached last Wednesday. All day the venerable patriarch of the beloved order was the recipient of many testimonials of congratulation, and the evening brought his brethren of Union and Rural Lodges. In the pleasant and commodious home of his son, Mr. Charles E. C. Breck, he warmly received his brethren. An hour was spent reviewing the happy days gone by and the valuable service rendered by Brother Breck to the craft through all his years of usefulness. Then Brother William T. Adams, of Union Lodge, in a most felicitous manner, presented Brother Breck, in behalf of his Masonic brethren, with an elegant adjustable easy chair. Mr. Breck said it was the most acceptable gift he could receive, and thanked the bestowers in a few words. The following ode, written by Brother

Adams, (Oliver Optic,) and dedicated to Worshipful Brother Charles Breck, was then sung to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne":

The winter snows and summer blooms
Have whitened Mother Earth
For ninety long, eventful years
Since this true life had birth.

CHORUS: Let not our ancient brother dear
By Craftsmen be forgot;
For ripe with four-score years and ten,
His record bears no blot.

A sage among the wisest men,
A trusty, faithful friend;
The widow's staff, the orphan's hope,
His kindness knew no end. (Chorus.)

When others failed, he knew no change,
His faith was ever strong;
The champion of the True, the Right,
His only foe the Wrong. (Chorus.)

Now blessings on his lengthened life
That near a century spans!
And may our brother clasp in faith
That stronger Arm than man's. (Chorus.)

A prayer was then offered by Rev. Brother William I. Lawrence. A collation followed, and the company broke up about 10 o'clock, Brother Breck taking each one by the hand as he thanked them for this testimony of their brotherly love.

Brother Breck was made a Master Mason in Rural Lodge, Quincy, February, 1826. In 1845 he, with two other Masons, revived an interest in Union Lodge, Dorchester, and became its Worshipful Master in 1851, serving two years. In a few years after, Rural Lodge needed his services, and he was the recipient of a Past Master's diploma from that lodge in 1856. He was exalted in St. Andrews R. A. Chapter in 1827, and made an honorary member in 1868. In 1866 he received the orders of knighthood in Old Colony Commandery, K. T., of Abington.

Mr. Breck was born in Medfield, and moved to Quincy in 1811. Some sixty-four years ago he came to Milton, and has been a true and faithful exponent of a good, true citizen and man. His thirty-six years as town treasurer speak volumes in his favor, the citizens at the last March meeting refusing to accept his resignation. His many years of life have been all along full of peaceful calm, and it is the wish of all that he may continue to enjoy the blessings of still further ripeness of years.

1360. VII. WILLIAM FOSTER BRECK.—The following obituary notice is taken from the current press:

It is with deep regret that we record the sudden death of one of our best citizens, W. F. Breck, of Grove City, in this county, on the 8th instant, aged 59 years.

His funeral sermon was preached on the 10th, in the Presbyterian Church near the family residence, by the Rev. Thomas Woodrow, D.D., pastor of the church, from James IV., 14., 'For what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away.' A large and sympathetic concourse of friends followed the remains to the Green Lawn cemetery near this city.

Mr. Breck was engaged in hauling in some grain from a field near his residence, when the horses started, and ran with him. He fell between the wagon and team, and one of the wheels passed over his neck, causing death almost instantly, the heart not ceasing to pulse for thirty or forty minutes. He did not speak, nor give any evidence of consciousness. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn their irreparable loss.

Mr. Breck removed from Carroll, in Fairfield County, in 1850, and soon after laid out, and improved to a considerable extent, the village now called Grove City. He was a man of noble and generous impulses, and sought to promote the happiness of all around him. He had a large circle of friends and acquaintances by whom he was greatly respected and beloved. He was a true patriot, alive to the welfare of his country, and ever ready to aid in suppressing the present rebellion. The soldier, and the soldier's wife and family, found in him a warm and constant friend, as many generous and noble acts attest. He was a man of great kindness of heart in his family. As a friend he was social and genial, and loved to see all around him happy. He was a man of strong integrity and uprightness in all his business transactions, and remarkably strict and honest in all his dealings. When he cast his lot in this locality, the country around was entirely new, and he set himself most sedulously to work for its improvement. He laid out the plan of a large and commodious residence for himself and family and for the reception of his friends. Part of this he erected and occupied for years, and he had made considerable progress in completing his original plan, when he was so suddenly and unexpectedly called away. He also erected a large grist and saw mill, which contributed greatly to the convenience and improvement of the neighborhood. He was one of the leading minds in the erection and completion of the new Presbyterian Church, which stands by the side of the village, and which for neatness and elegance is surpassed by few country churches in the state. Towards the erection of this church he contributed liberally from his own private resources, and subsequently, when efforts were made by the congregation to liquidate the debt on the building, his house and his heart were open to the friends of the cause. Indeed, his house was always open to the ministers of the gospel, and to the friends of religion, to whom he ever most cheerfully extended friendship and hospitality.

His beloved wife and family have sustained an irreparable loss. May the Lord comfort the heart of the widow, and be the guide and protector of the fatherless. The community has lost one of its brightest and most public-spirited members. Society has lost a generous benefactor, and one who was unwearied in his efforts to do good.

COLUMBUS, August 19th, 1864.

1361. REV. SAMUEL ACTON HUGHES, was born at Freeport, Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, 4th March, 1835; graduated at Jefferson College, 1858, and at Western Theological Seminary in 1861; settled over a Presbyterian church at Grove City, near Columbus, Ohio. Upon the breaking out of the war in 1862 entered the U. S. Army as 1st Lieutenant Company C., 113th Regt., Ohio Volunteers, and after seven months service was sent home sick, not expected to recover. He did, however, recover, and resumed his pastoral work in 1864, six years in Union County, Pa., three years at Lawrenceburg, Pa., and since at Parker City. (P. O., Parker's Landing.)

1550. VII. REV. J. LLOYD BRECK, D.D.—The following is from the sermon of Rev. Dr. Knickerbacker (Bishop-elect of Indiana) preached at Trinity Church, Philadelphia, 7th October, 1883:

Amid all the names of missionary bishops and faithful clergy who have taken part in this blessed work, there comes to me, to-day, the name of one presbyter who has borne a mighty part in the Church's missionary work, and whose memory deserves to be honored and held in thankful remembrance by the whole American Church. I refer to James Lloyd Breck. His great work of setting an example of primitive faith and self denial, and his influence on the revival of missionary zeal, cannot be too highly appreciated. He has left behind him more monuments of his work of faith and of the Church's confidence in him, than any other presbyter—Nashotah, Faribault, the endowment of the Diocese of Minnesota, the Chippeway Mission in Minnesota, the school on the Pacific coast for boys and girls. What prouder monuments could any man leave behind him.

Think of the long list of clergy who have gone forth from the divinity schools of Nashota and Faribault which he founded. Think of the sons and daughters of the Church educated in the schools which were the products of his faith and love; the parishes and missions organized in the wilds of Wisconsin and Minnesota by his burning zeal and unrewarded labor. Think of the souls brought to the light of the Gospel from heathenism by the good work he set going. Among the Chippeways at Kagahashicorkay, he only laid foundations, but he laid them broad and deep, and a glorious superstructure has been erected upon them by those who followed him, Cole, Whipple, Gallaher and Wingfield.

The memory of this honored presbyter in Wisconsin and in Minnesota, among the pine forests of the Ojibways, on the far off coast of the Pacific, is reverently cherished, and thousands remember him with love and gratitude. As years roll on, the whole American Church will realize more and more the debt of gratitude she owes to this man, and the missionary spirit his faith and example kindled.

1590. VII. ROBERT L. BRECK, D.D.—The following is taken from "Z. F. Smith's History of Kentucky."

Rev. R. L. Breck was the first chancellor, (of the Central University of Kentucky,) and was supported by an able board, conspicuous in which, for his interest and zeal, was the lamented S. P. Walters, of Richmond. In the struggles of the Presbyterian Church, Dr. Breck was an early leader. Of strong convictions, of unwavering courage, and devoted to the interests of Church and State, he was ever ready to contend for what he deemed the truth and right. The best energies of his life were given to Central University, and to him, while in this service, was its founding mainly due. Life, health, and personal considerations were sacrificed in its interests. Failing health necessitated his resignation as chancellor and seeking its restoration in the milder climate of California. Dr. Breck is a son of Hon. Daniel Breck, whose wife was a daughter of General Levi Todd, and was born at Richmond, May 8th, 1827. He graduated at Centre College, and studied theology at Alleghany and Princeton. His ministry was in Kentucky, Macon, Georgia, and New Albany, until the war; since 1865, at Richmond, Kentucky, and in California.

1591. VIII. PAULINE BRECK—The following is from the current press:

SUDDEN AND UNEXPECTED DEMISE OF THE ESTIMABLE PRINCIPAL OF BELLEWOOD ACADEMY AT ANCHORAGE.—The sudden and unexpected death of Miss Pauline Breck, Principal of Bellewood Seminary and Kentucky Presbyterian Normal School, on Tuesday, at Chicago, where she had gone for medical treatment, will be a great shock to her many friends throughout this and adjoining states. Her life, in the highest degree, has exemplified the wide sphere of usefulness open to a woman whose heart and talents are consecrated to the service of God. Losing her mother at the age of 17, she had at once thrust upon her by Providence the care and education of her younger sisters and brothers. Those who have visited, in days gone by, the home of her father, Rev. R. L. Breck, D. D., will remember the beautiful influence she exercised in the family, and few who had the privilege of coming into that delightful circle will ever forget the elder daughter, who graced its halls and charmed every visitor by her ladylike, dignified and lovely conduct of its affairs.

When duty no longer called her to watch over her father's home, she came to Bellewood to control and manage its financial and domestic affairs. Her success there exceeded all expectations, and to her talents, her refinement, her beautiful Christian life, much of the splendid success of Bellewood is due. Her death at this time is a great loss to that institution and to the Presbyterian Church in Kentucky. She had consecrated her life to the cause of female Christian education. Her whole soul had been placed in this work. Few women possessed so remarkable a combination of remarkable qualities. She was dignified, graceful, cultured, thoughtful, patient, firm, kindly, with a full complement of the proper emotions. Her whole career was one of self-sacrifice and usefulness. Her life has been a beautiful example of womanly tenderness and devotion to family and duty. She was 36 years of age, and, though so young, she left an impress for good on hundreds of those who came within her sphere and felt her power. In all that concerned church work, she was intelligent, earnest, conscientious and persistent. Her life felt the impulse of thorough Christian consecration, and of her it can truly be said, that under great difficulties, many sorrows and grievous trials "she hath done what she could."

Her funeral will take place at Richmond, Ky., this afternoon at 2 o'clock, from the Presbyterian Church. The senior class of Bellewood, accompanied by Rev. E. W. Bedinger, Prof. Morrison, and other members of the faculty, will leave Anchorage this morning to intercept at Winchester the train bearing the remains of Miss Breck, and proceed with it to Richmond.

Memorial services will be held at Anchorage on Sunday, November 20th, at 11 A. M., by Rev. E. W. Bedinger, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, of which Miss Breck was a devoted member.

A NOBLE WOMAN; FITTING TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF MISS PAULINE BRECK.—The memorial exercises in honor of Miss Pauline Breck, late principal of Bellewood Seminary, were held in the Presbyterian Church at Anchorage at 11 o'clock yesterday morning. The little sanctuary was crowded with the friends of the lady, who in life had been so loved and honored, and whose death was so sincerely mourned.

On the altar stood a cross and crown of roses, a tribute from Mr. and Mrs. Harry Warren, and a most fitting reminder of the character and the reward of the deceased. There were none present who did not seem to feel the sorrow and affliction of the hour, and none left the church without being deeply impressed with the truth that whatever life may bring, it can offer nothing more ennobling, comforting or joyful than a simple faith in the All-wise Ruler Miss Breck had loved and feared.

Rev. E. W. Bedinger, of Anchorage, preached the sermon, taking his text from Corinthians I., 21, "All things are yours." His remarks were a powerful appeal for a Christian life as the highest exponent of Christian faith. He showed the true secret of the effect of God's love in the human heart, and the triumphant work it must accomplish where the example and precept of Christ were followed. He reviewed the life of Miss Breck in its many spheres of self-denial and strict adherence to duty, and showed that every principle of her earnest and beautiful life was found in her dependence on God's continual help and guidance.

Dr. Bedinger was followed by Col. Bennett H. Young, Regent of Bellewood, who enlarged upon the chief points of Miss Breck's life, beginning, as she did, with a resolution to make herself a mother to her motherless brothers and sisters, and ending in her absolute consecration to the cause of religion. Her patience and cheerfulness for the past two years were most touchingly depicted. The character of woman's influence for good was eloquently brought out, and her mission and duty in Christ's work most earnestly set forth. Instances of what godly women had done were recited, and their effects compared with the life and influence of those who follow the biddings of fashion and pleasure rather than the voice of God. Col. Young's acquaintance with Miss Breck since her early girlhood enabled him to make her character and services a beautiful object lesson for young women.

Prof. R. C. Morrison, Principal of Bellewood, briefly referred to Miss Breck's work in the seminary. He characterized her as the most self-denying woman he had ever seen. He spoke of her patience in the discharge of difficult and trying duties, and declared her example to be one that women might well emulate. He appealed to her daily life as a testimonial of what earnest piety could do in the direction of womanly energy and impulse, and paid other beautiful and fitting tributes to her memory.

1610. VII. EDWARD CRUFT BRECK.—The following is from the current press of Richmond, Ky.:

The sad and shocking intelligence reached us on the morning of the 10th inst., that on the night before Edward C. Breck had accidentally shot and killed himself at his home in St. Louis, Mo.

He was the son of the late Judge Daniel Breck, and was born in this place on the 15th day of April, 1831. Some of our people recollect him in his youth, but most of them only knew and remember him in his matured years as the dignified, intelligent, affable gentleman during his occasional visits, or when they happened to visit the city of his adopted home, where he met them with a warm welcome, and extended to them those grateful courtesies which betoken the true-born, large-hearted gentleman. He always took a warm interest in the people and affairs of the home of his youth. He continuously renewed for nearly forty years his subscription to this paper (Kentucky Register) and its predecessors, and often expressed the great pleasure he took in reading its local news.

When he first grew up, he was for several years a clerk in the store of Field & Holloway of this place. Early in life, about 1853-4, he located in Savannah, Mo., and was successfully engaged for several years there in merchandising. When the branch of the Southern Bank of Missouri was located in that place, he became cashier, and so continued till in the midst of the war, owing to the disturbances, he removed to St. Louis, and soon afterwards became cashier of the Exchange Bank, and continued in that position for fifteen years, until it went out of existence. Thereupon he became cashier of the Commercial Bank, and was cashier or assistant cashier for nearly ten years, up to the time of his death. So that he was intimately and prominently connected with the most important business interests and the business men of that city for quite a quarter of a century; and his comparatively long and active business life, open to scrutiny whilst he lived, and reviewed since his death, is found to be without a blot or stain. In other respects he lead a quiet, unostentatious life, except that he took an intelligent interest in all the affairs which interested those for whom and with whom he was doing business, and which were calculated to build up the great city of his adoption. He was a useful and valuable citizen; upright and exemplary in life, possessing a high order of capacity and a long experience, he was regarded as a safe adviser and wise counsellor by many who were a power in inaugurating and conducting those enterprises which built up and moved the commerce of that great city.

The deceased married Letitia Todd, the daughter of Judge David Todd, of Columbia, Mo., who survives him. He left four grown sons and one daughter, and another daughter nearly grown. All were living happily under the parental roof. The four sons are all occupying honorable and responsible positions in commercial life. David, the eldest, is cashier in the insurance firm of Carroll & Powell; Daniel, the second son, is cashier for the Simmons Hardware Company; Robert, the third son, is a clerk at Carroll & Powell's; and Edward C. Breck, Jr., is in the employ of the Laelege Banking Corporation.

He had nobly fought the battle of life to a point where his surroundings were full of satisfaction and enjoyment, and offered every prospect for making his declining years comfortable and happy.

1650. VII. SAMUEL BRECK, OF BRIDGEWATER.—The following obituary notice was published in the current Boston Journal:

Mr. Breck was educated in the schools of Boston and at the Bridgewater Academy, and graduated at Harvard College in 1832. He studied law with Zachariah Eddy, Esq., of Middleborough, and entered upon its practice at Weymouth Landing, and subsequently at Taunton. For more than twenty years he has been a resident of Bridgewater. He was one of the pioneers in the organization of the Liberty party, and conducted a paper, The Beacon of Liberty, in its support, at Taunton, and earlier assisted another having the same object, We, The People, published in Bridgewater in 1835. With voice and pen he was an able, earnest advocate of the oppressed, and his labors in awakening the old colony upon this subject gave him prominence at the conventions of those who had become dissatisfied with the action of the Whig party. His unselfish patriotism was never questioned, as he never sought office himself, while doing efficient labor for others. His love of literature gave him a wide acquaintance with the best authors, with whom he found solace and enjoyment in the retirement of declining years. Several years since an insidious disease marked him as its victim, and his death, not unexpected, brought release to a life around which clusters many pleasant memories.

The following is taken from the volume "Bridgewater in the Rebellion," as characteristic. A number of the townspeople who had hired substitutes during the draft applied to the town to have the money they had expended for this purpose refunded to them by the town; this being under consideration:

At a meeting held April 23d, 1866, the following resolutions, offered by Samuel Breck, Esq., were read, and the meeting voted that they be accepted and placed on record:

"1. That the people of Bridgewater, yielding to no body of men on earth, in deep devotion to the interests and honor of the country, will not raise, by taxation or otherwise, any sum of money whatever to refund moneys contributed by individuals, to release themselves or others from the military service of the country in the time of great public danger.

"2. That the people of Bridgewater hold it to be the highest and most solemn duty of every citizen, when lawfully called upon, to maintain the rights and honor of his country with arms in his hands.

"3. That to the gallant men of Bridgewater, who during the late rebellion, in scorching sunshine and drenching storm, in the muddy camp by night, and in the toilsome march by day, in the fierce assault and furious battle, with constancy and courage, faced the enemies of their country, we tender our heartiest thanks, our warmest admiration.

"4. That to those men who, by their own and the charitable contributions of their neighbors, obtained exemption from the same glorious service, 'we tender our conditional silence.'"

1656. VIII. RICHARD A. BRECK.—The following is an extract from a letter of his messmate, Master C. T. Bowman, U. S. Navy, to his brother, dated U. S. S. "Yantic," Amoy, China, October 21st, 1874:

"Richard and I were classmates, and have consequently known each other about nine years. We were very good friends at the academy, but never very intimate ones. After graduating I saw little of him until we both joined the "Constellation," and since then we have been constantly together. This intimacy led on my part to a warm friendship for your brother, and now that he is no more, it is a pleasure for me to testify that he was all that you could have believed or desired him to be. He was a singularly correct and honorable man, and moreover a very promising officer, and I do not know one, out of a large class, who had more aptitude for the service than Richard had. He had a good professional knowledge, and this, combined with a peculiar decisiveness and energy, made him as capable an officer as there was of his years in the service. This of course will not lessen your regret, but it may be some consolation to know that he has left so good a name behind him."

The following obituary notice was published in the Congregationalist, (newspaper,) of Boston:

The Congregationalist, of October 1st, contained a brief notice of the death by railroad disaster of Mr. and Mrs. Willis, missionaries to the Freedmen at Marion, Alabama. On Tuesday of the same week they were suddenly called to mourn another of the Central Square congregation, of Bridgewater, Master Richard A. Breck, of the U. S. Navy, who was drowned at Amoy, China. So the dark shadow gathers again over the same community, as another, who it seemed could not be spared, has been taken.

Mr. Breck's service was in another line, in a very different field, but he carried into it the same earnest purpose of thorough conscientiousness, the same regard for his fellow men and reverence for God, that shone forth in their lives.

He was only 26 years of age, but had already given fullest promise that among the officers of our navy there should be, in coming days, men as true to their country and their God as were Foote and Farragut. Always firm and fearless for the right and true, no favor and no fear could make him swerve one hair's breadth from the line of duty. No allurements or temptations could induce him to yield an iota of principle or conviction. A most urbane gentleman, he was yet as true a Puritan.

No motive or persuasion could ever lead him to sign any paper that was not literally and strictly true. If he was where all others drank, the wine-cup never touched his lips. No doubtful or profane word ever passed them.

He died at last, caught when bathing with a fellow-officer of the "Yantic," who barely reached shore, in the undertow at the bathing place near Amoy. The wave was most unexpectedly rolled in by a terrible typhoon, which that same day was so fearful in its ravages at a distance in those seas. But a passage in one of his last letters home is singularly illustrative of his character, and has touching interest in connection with the manner of his death. "I have been urged," said he, "to go bathing on Sunday. I am not an expert swimmer, and there are opportunities offered here for great improvement, and it is said it is my duty to make myself as proficient as possible, for the time may come when my swimming powers will be taxed to the utmost. I shall not go; and if I am wrong, I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that my mistake was one of principle, and that I did not yield to sophistry. If I erred, I erred through fear of doing wrong."

There was sorrow, not only on board the "Yantic," where he was beloved and honored of all, but in the missionary circle to which he was already known and endeared. When, after three days, the body was recovered, tender and loving words were spoken by Dr. Talmage over that new grave in the beautiful cemetery on the Island of Kulangsen; the merchants and missionaries of Amoy, the officers and crews of English and Japanese men-of-war, as well as of his own sloop, the "Yantic," were there as mourners. Now there are mourners here whose hearts will ever turn to the monument his fellow-officers have there erected to his memory.

ALLEN YALES BRECK.

1700. VII. ALLEN YALES BRECK.—The annexed portrait could not be inserted with the record of his family, the space left for it having been taken up for additional data of his descendants after the pages had been electrotyped, it is therefore given here. It was expected to give with it an extended notice, but it was not completed in season.

1740. VII. WILLIAM GILMAN BRECK.—The following obituary was published editorially in the current press of Springfield, his home:

A BELOVED PHYSICIAN.—Doctor Breck is dead! This announcement will bring keen sorrow to hundreds of homes and to the hearts of uncounted friends. Endeared to them by a life-long service, his skill as a physician was excelled only by his devotion as a friend. The words of the Divine Master are strikingly exemplified in the life of a beloved physician, "If any one would be great among you let him be your servant." Dr. Breck's life has been one of constant, ardent, and unsparing service for his fellow men. An instance of his ever ready willingness to sacrifice his own comfort to the good of others occurred but a few days ago, and well illustrates the life of a busy physician. After a hard day's toil, and imperatively needing rest, he was summoned by telegram to Stafford, Ct. He traveled twenty miles over rough roads, reached his patient by midnight and saved the limb of an aged friend—ex-Lieut. Gov. Julius Converse.

Like the captain on the deck, the general on the field, the preacher in his desk, he died where he would choose to die, at his post of duty, at the bedside of the sick striving to relieve suffering and save life. He had often said to friends, "I want to die in harness," and that wish was literally fulfilled. Dr. Breck came to Springfield forty-five years ago, a young man of 25. His first home was on Cypress street. In 1858, he bought of Rev. Dr. R. H. Seeley, who was then called from the North Church pastorate to Paris, the "Edmund Palmer" place on Main street, where now stand the four stores owned by the Messrs. Bill. In 1869 he removed to the beautiful home he built on Round Hill, where for twenty years its hospitable doors have been always open. He married just before coming to Springfield in 1843, Mary Van Deventer, of Penn Yan, N. Y., whose usefulness in our city as a benefactor to the sick, the suffering, the friendless and the needy, has been second only to that of her husband. Their only son, Dr. T. F. Breck, who has been associated with his father in practice for twenty years, has for his noblest inheritance the name and fame of a physician whose memory will be long cherished in our community.

Dr. Breck was a born physician. His profession was chosen for the work of his life. He only commenced his studies when he left the college and the lecture course. He studied medicine at the bedside of the sick; surgery at the operation table; he was quick to discern the necessities of a case; was abounding in resources, and was self-reliant in the application of remedies. This was strikingly apparent at the tragic scene yesterday in the sick room of the dying priest. The doctor, with his abounding vitality, needed fresh air in large measure. He had for the past few weeks repeatedly spoken of this need. In the close air of the sick room he was conscious of the incipient congestion. Stepping to the open window, his cough raised a little blood. Instantly baring his arm, he said to his brother doctor, "Bleed me." The sight of the slow, dark drops was sufficient, and he at once realized in his own case that "all was over." In a few moments he sank into unconsciousness and death.

His prompt and heroic qualities were admirably combined with a wise caution that frequently saved life where a more daring practitioner would risk it. In the sick room he was an inspiration; his very presence awakened courage and planted a new hope. Manner and voice were indescribably encouraging. No general on the battle-field was more commanding; no mother at a child's cradle was more gentle; patient, assiduous, unsparring, he was never without hope while the spark of life remained.

The relation of a family physician, for such Dr. Breck eminently was, is exceedingly tender and affectionate. Cemented by long service, no human tie seems closer or stronger; with us when the hours are darkest and the skies are black with threatening; rejoicing with us when danger is past, or sorrowing with us when death claims its own. There are many instances in our city not unlike that of one of our townsmen who said to us last evening, "Forty years ago I called Dr. Breck to see my dying mother; the memory of the earnest young doctor inspiring hope when all hope was gone, is precious to this day. For thirty years he has been in my family, every member of which has been under his skillful care when seriously or dangerously sick. How could I help loving him, or how could I help grieving with a sorrow which, as it now seems, no lapse of time can ever remove." A striking presence disappears from our streets; a citizen of royal manliness is lost to our community; a "beloved physician" is dead.

1830. VIII. JOSEPH BERRY BRECK.—The following is from the current press of Boston, Mass., 1865:

The California papers bring intelligence of the recent decease, at San Francisco, of Lieut. Commander Joseph B. Breck of the Volunteer Navy. Commander Breck was a native of Maine, but made his residence at Newton, in this state, and was well known in this city, where he was highly esteemed, especially among some of our most eminent commercial men. He was for many years connected with the American mercantile marine, in which he was eminently successful as a shipmaster and business man. He was a man of great energy and sagacity, and in the fortunes of the seas had several adventures of singularly mingled heroic and romantic incidents.

He was engaged in the Pacific and China trade at the breaking out of the rebellion, but early offered his services to the Navy Department, and was commissioned as an acting ensign and assigned to the command of the U. S. Steamer "Nippon," built at this port by Capt. R. B. Forbes, of Milton. While in command of this vessel he captured the "Ella and Anna," afterward called the "Malvern," and co-operated in several other captures and exploits which secured his promotion respectively to the grades of Master, Lieutenant and Lieutenant Commander. His strength failed before the close of the war, and he went to California in the hope of regaining his health, which had become shattered by the exposure and hardships of the Southern blockade. The result has proved that he was past recovery, and his name must be added to the catalogue of those who have given their lives for the salvation of their country.

As an officer, Commander Breck was a strict disciplinarian, a thorough seaman, a man of undoubted courage, and a loyal patriot. Commander Breck was a brother of the wife of Hon. Thomas Rice, of Newton, and his name is upon the list of volunteers from that town.

3320. VI. AMASA BRECK was born at Medfield, Mass., in 1788. Early in life he removed to Bristol, R. I., where he engaged in the manufacture of saddles, harness and trunks. Here, in 1815, he married Miss Nancy Hoar. Bristol not proving a satisfactory location he removed in 1829 to Newport, and the next year to Providence, where he established the same business. The increasing demand for his trunks induced him to abandon his other manufactures and to establish a manufactory of trunks. To this he applied his characteristic indomitable energy and thrift, coupled with a strict integrity, and soon took the lead in that branch of business. His manufactory was highly prosperous during his lifetime, and was left to his sons Thomas and William, who still carry it on at the same location. Mr.

AMASA BRECK.

Breck was a genial and social companion, though of very decided opinions, and a devout member of the Episcopal Church. He was stricken down by typhoid fever at the age of 58. The above picture is copied from a portrait now in the possession of his son Thomas.

APPENDIX.

PART SECOND.

BRECK COATS OF ARMS, WITH BRIEF NOTES ON HERALDRY.

In the United States, where no coat of arms can be conferred, but one may be assumed at pleasure, as in the earliest days of heraldry, its only real value is that the one used is inherited from an ancestor who received it according to usage, for some deed of valor or other meritorious act; a coat of arms so derived is the only one having special interest in this connection. It is hardly necessary to say that no arms were conferred upon our Puritan ancestors in New England, or probably valued by them as an inheritance for several generations, and we must go back, therefore, to the English records, concerning the progenitors of Edward of Dorchester and his brothers, to determine the inheritance of their descendants in regard to family arms.

The account of the different coats of arms given here is prefaced with a brief summary, etc., of the general subject for the convenience of those not fully informed. The history of each, as far as known to the writer, is given with the engraving. It is hoped in a supplement, at a later date, to give more full details concerning the origin of Breck coats of arms.

BRIEF NOTES ON HERALDRY.—The Herald, an officer of great honor, was one whose duty consisted in the regulation of armorial bearings, the marshalling of processions, and the superintendence of public ceremonies. His functions included the bearing of messages of courtesy or defiance between royal or knightly personages; the superintending and registry of trials by battle, tournaments, etc.; the computation of the slain; and the recording of valiant acts by the fallen or surviving combatants. The principal Heraldic officers are designated Kings of Arms, or Kings at Arms, and the novitiates or learners, Pursuivants.

Heraldry includes the knowledge of all the multifarious duties devolving on a Herald. At first every Knight assumed the Arms he pleased without consulting his sovereign or King at Arms, and the resulting confusion led to restraint in this matter, in the time of Henry V. of England, limiting the use of Arms to those who obtained them by inheritance or as a grant from the crown. Colleges of Heralds grew up, and the visitations or processions of Heralds (A. D., 1528) were instituted as further means of restraint.

Hereditary armorial bearings seem to have been adopted in the twelfth century, the essential principle being their hereditary character. Before hereditary heraldry supplied the charges for the shield, it was usual for knights to leave their shields blank until they had achieved some deed worthy of being portrayed. In the infancy of hereditary heraldry the armorial shield was confined to Knights, and was given only by princes and lords paramount. Subsequently, when other classes became important, or possessed influence in the state, arms became the insignia of families generally without the decree of knighthood being necessary. The earliest charges appear to refer to military achievements, deeds of courage, and other personal qualities, spoils of the enemy, and later to surnames after they became common.

Passing over Arms of States, Royal Arms, and Arms of Communities, we need in this connection to refer only to Arms of persons and families.

Arms of Persons and Families.—These became the distinguishing marks of personal honor. They were frequently granted by the sovereign or by some one authorized by him. The assumption of arms by private persons was restrained by the King of England in 1418. The crown (in England) still retains the power of granting arms, notwithstanding the patents granted to Kings of Arms from very early times to the present, and reserves to itself the granting of supporters to commoners and of permitting persons to use arms of other families whose property they may inherit or whose memory they wish to preserve.

The Shield (in heraldry, escutcheon or scutcheon) is the field or ground on which are represented the figures that make up a Coat of Arms. Shields have varied much in form at different periods—twenty-one different shapes are given in the article from which most of these notes are taken.

By tincture is meant the metals and colors of shields and their bearings: Gold is or; silver, argent; blue, azure; red, gules; green, vert; purple, perpure; black, sable; orange or tawny, teuny; blood color, sanguine.

The lines used in arms to part the field are either straight or crooked: Straight lines are carried evenly through the escutcheon and are perpendicular |; horizontal —; diagonal dexter \; diagonal sinister /. Crooked lines are the engrailed, like saw teeth with round points down; the invected, same, points up; the wavy, as the name suggests; the embattled or crenelle, resembling the outline of a battlement; the nebule, with projections resembling the cross section of a T rail; the regule, with square-like oblique projections at long intervals; the indented, like saw teeth with narrow bases; the dancette, same, with wide bases; the dove-tail, as the name suggests; the battle embattled and the champaine, not easily describe without a figure. These lines are used to divide the field; if it be divided into two equal parts by a perpendicular line it is said to be parted per pale; if by a horizontal line, parted per fess; if by a diagonal dexter, parted per bend, if by a diagonal sinister, parted per bend sinister; if the field be divided into four equal parts it is said to be quartered; if by two diagonal lines, dexter and sinister, crossing in the center of the field it is said to be parted per saltier.

Charges:—

A charge is whatever is contained in a field. All charges are distinguished by the names of honorable ordinaries, sub-ordinaries and common charges.

Honorable Ordinaries.—The chief is an ordinary determined by a horizontal line (if other than straight, so stated) placed in the upper part of the escutcheon and contains, in depth, one-third of the field. Its diminutive is a fillet not exceeding one-fourth of the chief, and stands at the lowest part of the chief.

The pale is an ordinary of two perpendicular lines from top to base of the shield and contains the third middle part of the field. Its diminutive is pallet. It is sometimes accompanied by diminutives (cotised), called also endorsed.

The bend is formed by two diagonal lines from the dexter chief to the sinister base and contains the fifth part of the field—the bend sinister is the same formed the contrary way.

The fess is an ordinary produced by two parallel lines across the shield horizontally and contains the third part thereof.

The bar is formed by two similar lines containing only the fifth part of the field; there may be more than one bar on the escutcheon.

The cross is an ordinary formed as its name suggests, the extremities touching or not the edges of the shield.

The saltier is an ordinary formed by the bend and bend sinister crossing at right angles.

Torteau (pl. torteaux or torteaux) is an ordinary in the form of a circular disc colored red, called also roundel gules.

Chevron, an ordinary like two rafters or principals of the roof of a house. And others in great variety.

Sub-Ordinaries.—Are other heraldic figures of worthy bearings, such as the annulet, the lozenge, the shield (or inescutcheon,) etc., etc., less commonly met with.

Common Charges.—These are of great variety, natural or artificial: animals' heads, war implements, ships, keys, celestial bodies, dragons, etc., etc.

External Ornaments:—

Crowns, coronets and mitres need not be more than mentioned here.

The helmet is placed over arms as a mark of gentility; open faced with bars denotes the king or royal family; barred in profile all degrees of peerage; direct without bars and a little open, baronets and knights; side standing with beaver close, esquires and gentlemen; but these rules have been sometimes varied from.

Mantling or lambrequin, a kind of scarf or streamer which became an embellishment of the helmet, and forms a species of scroll work, flowing from the helmet ornaments on both sides of the shield.

Wreath or torse is formed of two pieces of silk, commonly of the first two colors of the armorial bearings, twisted together and surrounding the upper part of the helmet as a fillet, and appears to bind the lambrequin close to the helmet.

The crest is the highest part of the ornaments of the coat of arms; it was placed upon the helmet, within the wreath; it does not necessarily have any allusion to, or derivation from the bearings on the shield.

Crests were formerly marks of great honor, because only worn by heroes of great valor, or by some superior military commander, that he might be easily distinguished in battle.

The scroll is the ornament placed below the shield containing a motto or short sentence alluding thereto, or to the bearings, or to the bearer's name.

Supporters are figures standing on the scroll and placed on the side of the escutcheon, so called because they seem to support the shield.

Some of the Rules for Writing Descriptions of Armorial Bearings:—

The tincture of the field must be first mentioned, then proceed to principal charges which possess the most honorable place on the shield, such as fess, chevron, etc.; always name that charge first which lies next to and immediately upon the field.

After naming the tincture of the field, the honorable ordinaries, or other principal figures, their attributes and afterwards their metal or color must be specified.

When an honorable ordinary, or some one figure is placed upon another, it is always to be named after the ordinary or figure over which it is placed, with the expression surtout or over all.

When a principal figure possesses the center of the field its position is not to be expressed.

Explanations of Some Terms Used:—

Erased—Torn off leaving jagged edges.

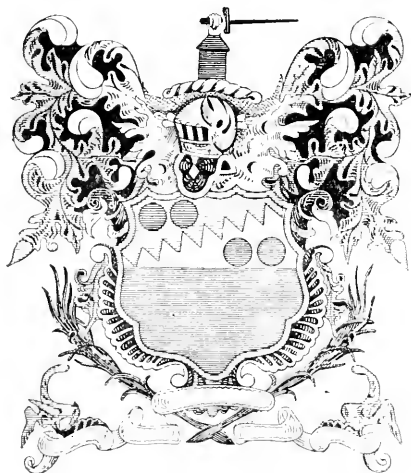

Humetty—Applied to a fess, etc., which is cut off, nowhere reaching the edge of the shield.

Inescutcheon—A smaller escutcheon borne within a shield.

Right and left—(Dexter and sinister) sides of a shield are the opposite of those sides as to the person facing the shield,—that is, his right is the left of the shield, and his left the right of the shield.

Proper—The natural colors of animals, plants, birds, etc., etc., are expressed by this term.

COAT OF ARMS, No 1.—Description: (This is enclosed in branch and scroll work and attached to the scroll in the original.) "He beareth Gules, a Chief parted per bend Sinister, Indented, Or and Argent, and on the Second and on the Third four Torteuxes of the first; Crest, a Dexter Arm Issuing out of a Wreath Erect holding a sword proper; by the Name of Breck." In colors, the shield is red with gold border; upper portion of the chief, gold, lower portion, silver; the torteaux, red; wreath and mantling, red and silver; branches, green; back portion of helmet, gold; arm of crest, red.

out of a Wreath Erect holding a sword proper; by the Name of Breck." In colors, the shield is red with gold border; upper portion of the chief, gold, lower portion, silver; the torteaux, red; wreath and mantling, red and silver; branches, green; back portion of helmet, gold; arm of crest, red.

History: The original of this coat of arms was temporarily in the possession of Dr. Wm. G. Breck, of Springfield, Mass., who very kindly furnished me a handsome copy in colors. He obtained it from Miss Mary Hooker, [1128], of Long Meadow, Mass., a great-great-great-granddaughter of Rev. Robert Breck, [190], of Springfield, (born 1713, died 1784,) from whom she has it transmitted to her by inheritance as the family coat of arms. No further history of it has been obtained. From the high character of the Rev. Robert Breck of Springfield, and the antiquity of this coat of arms, there seems no doubt that he inherited it from his English Breck ancestors, through Edward [10] of Dorchester.

COAT OF ARMS, No. 2.—Description: (Found written on the back of the original.) “Ile* beareth sable; a fesse humette between three bears’ heads, erased, argent; by the name of Breck. This coat of arms was granted to Robert Breck, of the city of Chester, Gentleman and descends to that name. Copy from Heraldry. Attest, Sam. Osborn.”

(Probably written at Liverpool or Chester, England, about 1805.) “Motto from Sir John Burke’s Dictionary—Firmus Maneo, I remain constant.”

In colors the shield is black with orange border; the fess humetty, orange; the bears’ heads, silver; the lion, tawny; back portion of the helmet, silver; the wreath and mantling, red and orange; the branches, green.

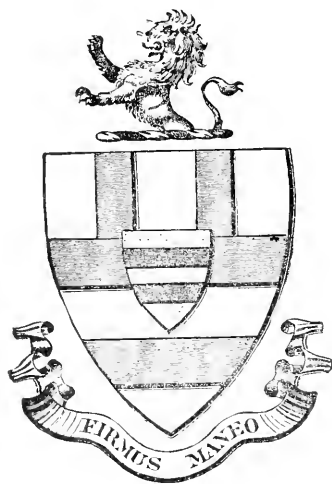

History: The original drawing, in colors, of this coat of arms from which the above is taken, was obtained by Capt. Joseph Breck, [1090], of Littleton, Mass., on one of his voyages to England, and a copy politely furnished me by his granddaughter, Miss Sarah A. Breck, [1641], 346 west Fifty-sixth street, New York. Unfortunately there is little of history with it. The city of Chester is sixteen miles from Liverpool; Rainforth (now Rainford) but ten miles from Liverpool, and Ashton (now Ashton-under-Lyne) but forty miles from Liverpool; the Brecks, we have every reason to believe, were not numerous in England; Ashton and Rainforth were, we know, the residence of our ancestors about A. D. 1600; we may, therefore, infer, from the fact that Capt. Breck brought this home as his coat of arms, that he found Robert Breck of Chester in his line of ancestry, and that he is, therefore in ours. Capt. Breck was an ardent patriot, and in his copy (the original of the above) he took for a crest the flag of the United States, this is replaced in the above cut by what, from Sir John Burke's Dictionary, is believed to be the original crest.

* Latin for he.

COAT OF ARMS, No. 3.—Description: "Arms of Breck"

as given in "Sir John Burke's Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage of the British Empire."

If colored, the lion should be tawny; the white ground, white; the horizontally lined space, blue; the inner shield, black and gold.

History: The above was kindly furnished the writer by Mr. Edward Breck, [1833], son of the late Lieutenant Commander Joseph B. Breck, U. S.

Navy), who is now in Europe, procured by him while in London; no further particulars obtained.

ACCOUNT OF EDWARD BRECK OF DORCHESTER.

(Reprinted, with additions, from Vol. XIV of the Mass. Colonial Society's Publications, 1913.)

Edward Breck, our first American ancestor, the author of the vigorous letter against the Quakers mentioned on page 179 of Samuel Breck's "Breck Family," was an excellent specimen of the sturdy type of Briton that settled New England. The name which, in several variations, means "ruddy" in the Gaelic tongues, would seem to point to a Celtic origin, but whether Scottish, Irish or Welsh is unknown. A vague family tradition derives the stock from the highland Stewarts of Appin; but it is significant that the country about Liverpool and Chester, where the name of Breck was common, lies not far from the marches of Wales. There is also a fair possibility that the race was Norman, since at the time of the earliest mention of the name it was coupled with the particle del, no doubt from de la. However, as there were cases in which the particle was used by native families of influence in the manner of the Norman ruling class, this suggestion can hardly be admitted to the dignity of an argument.

As early as 1323 Robert del Brek and his son Thomas (Robert is a persistent family name) are mentioned in the roll of inhabitants of West Derby, Lancashire, and in 1325 Thomas is put down as Thomas del Breck at Liverpool, a part of which West Derby now forms. In and about Liverpool the name still persists, there being a Breck Road, Breck House, Breck Side Park, and Walton Breck Road to this day, though no Brecks now reside in England.

Edward Breck (or Brecke, as the name was generally spelled in the earliest days) who came to Dorchester with the company of the Rev. Richard Mather in 1635, is usually called yeoman, though of ancient lineage, and possessing kinsmen mentioned in the heralds' visitations (c. g. Chester) as gentlemen. He was the son of Robert and the grandson of Hugh or Thomas, probably the former, who died at Rainforth (now Rainford), part of the parish of Prescot, Lancashire, in 1591. Edward, who was born in or near the year 1600, was probably left by his father in good circumstances, for he was a landholder and "man of distinction" before he left Rainforth for New England, and he brought with him to Dorchester a man-servant, as appears from the letter written him about the year 1646 by his old pastor, the Rev. James Wood, from Ashton, near Rainforth: "I pray you commend me dearly to your sonn Robert, & to your man John Birchall, that went over with you fro our towen."¹ Edward began at once to take an important part in the public life of the Dorchester settlement, and served the town in various capacities, including repeated terms as selectman, while his eldest son, Robert, moved to Boston and became a prominent merchant. The latter bought many tracts along the water-front, the deeds of which are recorded, and also received in 1655 from his father, Edward, a house and garden in Boston, recovered by law-suit. Robert left no descendants, and in all probability left the country soon afterwards for Galway in Ireland.² One of Edward's daughters, Elizabeth, married John Minot, from whom the American family of that name is descended. Edward's eldest son (after the departure of Robert) was John, who held the rank of Captain in the colonial forces, and whose grave-stone, in perfect condition, still stands in the old grave-yard at Upham's Corner, next that of his son, Ensign Edward. John, from whom all the Brecks of this branch are descended, was the son of Edward's second wife, Isabell, who was the widow of John Rigby. The loss of Edward's first wife, as well as of a son and a daughter, is referred to in the letter of the Rev. James Wood as follows: "but me thinkes my thoughts returne this Apollogie for my old frend, he is in sorrowe for his dear wife, for his sweet daughter, both which I hear God hath of late taken vnto himselfe. So hopefull a somme here, so gracious & sweet a wife & daughter there, cannot but lye close to a tender father & loneing husband's hart." Edward Breck died in the year 1662, leaving an estate, the value of which ran into hundreds of pounds sterling, a large sum for his day, while his son, Captain John, died in 1690, worth over £1350. From John descend the families of Breck, Minot, Parkman, Blake, Tuckerman, Denny, Shaw, Sturgis, and others prominent in the Colony.

¹ New England Historical and Genealogical Register, ii. 255-260. Cf. v. 396-397; xi. 338.

² Because in an unrecorded deed there is mention of "Robert Breck of Galway in Ireland Merchant," it has been erroneously asserted that he was an Irishman. The statement that Edward Breck acted as servant to one Paddy is devoid of all proof, and is utterly impossible in the case of a man of his position, the incidents of whose life are well known. (See J. B. Cullen, Story of the Irish in Boston, 1889, p. 20; Journal of the American-Irish Historical Society, 1904, iv. 56.)

THE "BRECK CHAIR".

Brought from England in 1635 by Edward Breck. Carved with his initials. Rare and fine specimen of early Jacobean wainscot chair of oak. There were very few in New England, stools and forms being commonly used. Pedigree of Chair:—Edward Breck, John Breck, Robert Breck, his daughter Sarah Gott, her daughter Anna Brigham, her daughter Anna Davis, her son Jos. Davis, his son Geo. C. Davis, and his daughter, Miss Mary Louise Davis, Troy, N. Y., who now owns the Chair.

It is significant of the degree of refinement obtaining among even the earliest pioneers of New England, that in the inventory of Edward Breck's estate occurs the mention of a bath-tub; while the general culture of the period and place is proved by the large number of well written letters still extant.

Among the latter none is more interesting than that against the Quakers. It is from the copy of the quarto pamphlet in the British Museum, London,¹ and forms but one-fifth of the pamphlet, the remainder being made up of the answer of the Quakers to Mr. Breck's accusations. It may be pointed out that Breck could not have known anything about the Quakers except through hearsay, since the first persons of that sect to tread New England soil were the women, Anne Austin and Mary Fisher, who arrived in 1656, a year after Breck's letter to his old friends at Rainforth was written. Since there can be no doubt that the colonists were well informed upon all such subjects as those of witchcraft and Quakerism, which they were sure to confound, it may be imagined into what a hostile atmosphere these two wretched women were plunged. Thrust into prison at once, they were then stripped and examined, and soon afterwards shipped off to Barbados. Mr. James Bowden² opines that it was a happy thing for Austin and Fisher that no abnormal feature, such as a mole, was found on their bodies; but the letter of Edward Breck shows us that it was not natural physical features that were sought, but rather something in the nature of the "silk thread" that was found on the woman of Bristol, the story of which was no doubt as familiar to the majority of Massachusetts citizens as to Mr. Breck. As Edward Breck died in 1662, he saw only the beginnings of the persecution of both the Quakers and the alleged witches, which in a few years reached such a tragic climax.

¹ There are copies in the Library of Congress, John Carter Brown Library, and Watkinson Library. The last secured the Brinley copy (Brinley Catalogue, i. 65). Mr. Frederick L. Gay also owns a copy.

² History of the Society of Friends in America, i. 35.

Parish Register of Prescott, Lancashire, reaches back only a few years previous to 1600. Contains the names of two daughters of "Robt. Brecke," both apparently named Jane, one of whom was buried in 1603 and the other in 1607 at "Raynforth" (now Rainford). Robert was the father of the first American Edward, who called his eldest son after him.

Early mention of name Breck. The will of Oliver Ledelmre, Chantr. priest at Tichborne, Southampton, 1513, contains the following words: "Item: lego domino Johanne Breke Breck xij d." The name is twice written, the second time as if in correction. The use of the word dominus means that this Breck was of superior station. As a rule the Brecks were north of England people.

In Lipscom's "History of Buckinghamshire" it is recorded that Robert Breche (Brecke) was rector of Waddesdon, presented 6 Sept. 1366 by Hugh Earl of Devon. Still earlier is a mention, in Woodward's "History of Hampshire," of William de Breche who, with others, was appointed to hold an inquisition at Selborne in 1274-5, to decide certain claims of one Adam Gurdon. Here again we have the name used with the article de.

Edward Brecke, useful Citizen. 1653, the Mass. General Court ordered E. Brecke and five others to be "prudentiall men" of Nashaway, to see to all allotments, etc., and to advise the Court when it might be "meete to give them full libertjes of a township, according to lawe."

Capt. John Breck (b. 1651): 1679, "Ye elder & two Deacons & John Breck" were appointed a Committee to fix the salary of Mr. Flint, the clergyman.

Susanna Clapp was probably John's wife, as the date of her birth, 1648, allows it and there is no other mention of her marriage in the Clapp genealogy.

From the records of the First Church: "Me(morandum), ye 6, (16)87 Bro. John Wales did Vollentaryly make Confession of his sin of being overtaken in drinking to excess on a training day at John Breck's house, being ye day yt he (sd Breck) did accept of his commission to be Captin."

A good deal of drinking was done by the more well-to-do of the early colonists on festive occasions. In 1628 "aquavite" and "Spanish wyne" was already being imported.

Rev. Robert Breck (See page 200 of "Breck Family"): took first honors in his class at Harvard in 1730 at the age of 17. (Green's "History of Springfield".) "The rising young men of the valley were Breck and Edwards (Jonathan)." . . . "Breck brought the religion of Springfield through the revolutionary period, and opened the way to modern ideas. . . . Scholars have since bowed to the genius of Edwards, but the people live the principles of Breck."

SIDE-VIEW OF "BRECK CHAIR."

Jonathan Edwards opposed Breck, and fate willed it that Breck should give the casting vote that ousted Edwards from his Northampton parish. Robert Breck did not like Whitefield, the Methodist, and did not favor "revivals" in religion.

In regard to Robert's "taking first honors" on his graduation, while it is quite possible that he was a good scholar, it has been pointed out by the antiquarian, Mr. Albert Matthews, editor of the Harvard "College Books," that the students, previous to 1773, were catalogued, not according to scholarship, but the social station of their fathers. Finding Robert Breck's name near the head of the list, Mr. Green took for granted that he graduated with "first honors." As a matter of fact the Harvard career of this ancestor, though he became a very eminent man, was somewhat stormy. The old records show the following incidents:

"Sept. 12, 1727. Richardson senr., Parker, Breck were publickly admonish'd in ye Hall, for drinking Rum (forbidden by ye College Laws) in ye College in Richardson's chamber, & for making disorderly noises in ye College at or near midnight. . . . Richardson being most guilty . . . was oblig'd to make a confession in ye Hall, was call'd forth from his seat while 'twas read, and he was fined five shillings. The others . . . stood in yr places, & receiv'd ye admonition, and were punished three shillings a piece, but not oblig'd to make a publick confession."

"Mar. 29, 1729. The same day 'twas agre'd by ye President & Tutors, & Math. Professor, yt a general Admonition & warning should be given to ye Scholars against playing at Cards, whereof many of them were guilty of late; & yt Richardson Senr., Stoddard, Sprague, Breck, should be named in particular.

These admonitions were given in ye Hall the same day in the evening (being Saturday) between singing & prayer. Those who had won any thing at Cards, were directed to restore it. All were Inform'd, yt if for ye future any were found guilty of playing Cards, yy should be dealt with according to ye severity of ye Laws."

Such conduct could not but be distasteful to so upright and scholarly a man as his father, the revered minister of Marlboro, and in May of the same year, 1729, young Robert was removed from college; but continued his studies under his father to such advantage that, at the latter's request, the "President & Fellows" of Harvard College, on account of "his studious, blameless behaviour in his recess from ye College," granted him his first degree on June 11, 1730.

Robert was still in residence at Harvard in 1734, as the "Corporation Records" show that "Mr. Robert Breck" enjoyed "Madam Saltonstall's Donation" for that year, in May of which he preached his first sermon at Springfield. This means that he was studying theology at the College. It is very likely that the rumor of his early piccadillos at Harvard occasioned part of the opposition to his election to the pastorate at Springfield. (See page 200, "Breck Family".)

Samuel Breck, brother of the preceding, was made a scholar on the Hollis Foundation in 1739, and in 1742 received six pounds from the Col. Fitch legacy for those "of good capacity for the work of the Ministry."

Robert Breck, grandson of Robert of Springfield: "Oct. 6, 1776 a Committee of the House made a report recommending that a depot of ammunition be established at Northampton, to be under the care of Robert Breck. In this 'magosene' were 'two tons of Gun Powder, Six tuns of leaden Ball and Eight thousand Flints, together with three Hundred fire Arms.'"

Jonathan Breck (p. 49, "Breck Family"): In the eldest line of Dorchester. Served in the Revolutionary army at 18 years. Was "ruddy complexion, height 5 ft. 8 in." He is erroneously called "Brick" in the work, "Massachusetts in the Revolution." In those days, and previously, the pronunciation of brick and Breck were apparently nearly alike. The phrase, "brecks and mortar" has been found in the letters of that period.

Samuel Breck (b. Boston, 1747.) Vol. 3 of the publications of the "Bostonian Society" has a reference (p. 84) to "Mr. Breck, a thriving merchant," who built and resided in the "beautiful, large square house occupying all the ground between Winter Street and Hamilton Place, having a garden around it, laid out in the English style, with box-bordered beds of lovely flowers, and surrounded by a brick wall three feet high." During the British occupation of Boston Earl Percy resided in this mansion. Mr. Breck was the official representative of the French government.

CAPT. JOHN BRECK'S GRAVESTONE

Of English slate in perfect condition. Stands with that of his son, Ensign Edward, in the North Burying Place (Upham's Corner) at Dorchester, Mass. No trace of first Edward's gravestone.
